THE terrible railway wreck on the New York Central, whereby twenty human beings were ushered into eternity without a moment's warning is well calculated to leave a lasting impression on the average mind. It is impossible to say how soon the catastrophe may be duplicated nor who will be the victims. When such an accident occurs on a main line the necessity for careful supervision of

THERE is nothing too small to escape the attention of the wideawake newspaper man. We read that Mrs. Langtry's heart (?) was touched by the intelligence that her husband had died in a madhouse. It would take a very powerful microscope to locate that part of the Lily's anatomy.

JOSEPH L. HAYCOCK, M.P.P., is still in the ring. He was nominated on Saturday as the standard bearer of the Independent Electors of Frontenac to contest the riding for the Local Legislature. "Joe" is a man of marked individuality and versatility and is equally at home at a logging bee, a base ball match or a political gathering. In his address at the nomination meeting on Saturday Mr. Haycock found much to praise in the way the affairs of the Province had been administered. Regarding colonization roads, he had gone over considerable of the road and found that general satisfaction was given in this respect. He voted with the Government on the matter because he thought the money was being judiciously spent. He also adverted to the Engledue grant and upheld the action of the government. The opposition had made a howl over it, but he had voted for the agreement giving Engledue and Wood the territory for prospecting because the development of that mineral country would be a good thing. When men of capital and enterprise came forward in such a way they should be encouraged. While he did not argee with the government that there was a surplus of $4,000,000, he figured out that the government had a surplus of over $1,000,000. Mr. Haycock is honest and sensible enough to give the government praise where it is due. He differs very materially from the opposition in this respect. The policy of the opposition as enunciated by Mr. Whitney and his lieutenants is a policy of denunciation. They can see nothing good in the acts of their opponents and are so sweeping in their condemnation that their alleged arraignments fall on barren ground. The jaundiced addresses and idle boasting of Mr. Whitney and his lieutenants are of the kind that create amusement but do not carry conviction.

Modern Methods.

A singular instance of the way in which large corporations are now able to economize by keeping within themselves the profits which formerly went to outside industries is seen in the management of an extensive English railroad. There is hardly a thing needed on the line, from a locomotive to a printed label, that is made for it by people not belonging to the company. It makes its own artificial legs. When an employe is so unfortunate as to lose a limb a wooden leg or arm, as the case may be, one is sent from the main carpenter's shop. The leg-making department employs a couple of expert instrument makers, who are kept at work constantly to supply the demand. One man is engaged solely in etching fancy designs upon the plate of ground glass used in the first-class compartments and saloons. A photographer-in-ordinary is always ready for a summons. If a bridge shows signs of decay or an embankment is likely to slip, a despatch is sent to the photographer, who forthwith takes a picture of the "accident," which is forwarded to the engineer in chief, who is thus often saved the necessity of making a personal visit.

ONE HONEST MAN.

Dear Editor.—Please inform your readers, that if written to confidentially, I will mail, in a sealed letter, particulars of a genuine, honest, home cure, by which I was permanently restored to health and manly vigor, after years of suffering from nervous debility, sexual weakness, night losses and weak shrunken parts. I was robbed and swindled by the quacks until I nearly lost faith in mankind, but thank heaven I am now well, vigorous and strong, and wish to make this certain means of cure known to all sufferers. I have nothing to sell and want no money, but being a firm believer in the universal brotherhood of man, I am desirous of helping the unfortunate to regain their health and happiness. I promise you perfect secrecy. Address with stamp, WM. T. MULFORD, Agents' Supplies, P.O. Box 59, St. Henri, Que.

200 miles distant, thunder is rarely audible ten miles. The thunder from very distant storms, therefore, seldom reaches the ear. Hence, if every thunder-storm has to be recorded, a large number of stations will be needed; probably one for every twenty-five square miles would not be too many. A few stations would suffice, at least for the night time, for the reporting of the direction and movement of every case of distant lightning.

The reason of the great uncertainty in the audibility of thunder is not hard to understand. It depends not merely on the initial intensity of the crash, but quite as much on the surroundings of the observer, even as in the quiet country one will observe feeble sounds that escape the ear in a noisy city. Perhaps the most curious and important condition of audibility is that the thunder-wave of sound shall not be refracted or reflected by the layers of warm and cold air between the observer and the lightning or by the layers of wind, swift above and slow below, so as to entirely pass over or around the observer. Sound, in its wave-like progress obliquely through layers of air of different densities, is subject to refraction, and this refraction may occur at any time and place. Thus, observers at the topmast of a ship frequently hear fog whistles that are inaudible at sea level; those on hilltops hear thunder that cannot be heard in the valley; those in front of an obstacle hear sounds inaudible to those behind it.

The rolling of thunder, like that of a distant cannonade, may be largely due to special reflections and refractions of sound. Again, the greater velocity of the air at considerable altitudes above the ground distorts the sound wave and shortens the limit of audibility to the leeward, while increasing it to the windward.

Good for the Cow.

The other day a bicycle rider found a rare chance for sport. He was near the suburbs of Worcester. A farm wagon appeared, with a cow trailing behind, patiently submitting herself to be led by a rope from the front seat. The bicycle idiot rode up to the cow and began a series of tactics to annoy her. He punched her in the ribs, yelled in her ears and dodged around her legs. Occasionally he fell back, and taking hold of her tail, attempted to make her tow his bicycle. The cow objected and kicked vigorously. This only amused the rider, and he directed his attention to an annoyance that would induce her to continue kicking, meanwhile keeping out of reach of her heels. Finally the animal stopped kicking and appeared to become indifferent. Some spectators on a passing street car observed, however, that she had turned her head so as to keep an eye on her persecutor. It took her a few minutes to get the range, and meanwhile the bicycle idiot grew bold and reckless, encouraged by her quiet behavior. Suddenly the animal darted forward, so as to get a slack in the rope, stopped short and let both heels fly. Her aim was sure this time, and the bicycle went out from under the idiot's feet. The street car spectators raised a shout, the motorman rang a chime with his gong, and the farmer and his boy whipped up the horse. The impassive cow only wiggled her ears and gave an imaginary fly on her side a triumphant slap with her tail. The wheel was so twisted that the rider had to walk home as helplessly as the cow was being led. He will not sue the owner of the cow.—Worcester (Mass.) Gazette.

A Bride's Rich Costume.

For a bride has been most successfully designed a ball gown of rose hued miroir velvet. The entire bodice is richly embroidered with mother-of-peal nailheads. The sleeves are of pink gauze, spangled in the same way and lined with rose satin. This satin is used throughout as a lining and the skirt is entirely separate from the foundation satin slip, and all the latest evening skirts are so arranged. They are narrower, the fullness being thrown well to the back, and as they are separte from the lining more trimming is required, and in numerous instances this takes the place of flounces and pleats at the side.

Three gauze ruffles, covered with the nailheads, border the skirt and give the finishing touch.

Understand Your Own Style

But few realize how long it takes to learn one's own style. It is a lesson that cannot be too quickly comprehended, and I am not alluding to style in clothes only, as those who read between the lines well know. However, here is not the place for a lecture, so I hasten to relate to you the very latest news collected from many sources, all reliable and worthy of serious contemplation, if you would be up to date.

The redingote, the princess and the cuirasse models have, thus far, been received with so much favor that the much-worn, round-belted blouse bodice unto night showeth knowledge, but all days were dumb to me and all nights black in ignorance while I have been waiting to come thus into your presence, and offer you my heart, my hand, and my fortune."

Thus speaking he flung himself at her feet, the meanwhile ten large and soiled Indians from the headwaters of the river came forward, rolling into the beautiful reception room, ten barrels of pure, unadulterated gold dust, worth $19.35 an ounce at any mint in the land.

At first Lady Claire's fair face took on a kindly look, and there was in it almost a rosy flush of hope. She watched the barrels eagerly, for they looked so much like the barrels her father was wont to pack hams in ere he had come hither from Chicago so many years agone.

However, it was but a moment until she detected nothing in the barrels save gold dust, and she involuntarily and convulsively clutched at her bediamonded and gold stomacher, hanging now so loosely about her fair form.

The Count, still at her feet, took no notice for he had not spent the winter in Klondyke, and did not know how it was.

As she saw what the Count was lavishing upon her, she drew back and touched him with her foot as a token that he might rise.

"Take back your gold, Count," she said, waving her lily white hand for the Indians to withdraw as they had come—that is, accompanied by the barrels. "Take back your gold—I have no use for it here. It was kind of you to think of it, and I am sure I appreciate your courtesy; but Charlie McManagin has forty pounds of boiled dog which he says shall be all mine own if I accept him; and you must excuse me, Count—really you must."

Before the ice broke up in the river in July the Count began to understand Lady Claire's choice.—W. J. Lampton in New York Sun.

The August Sun Spot.

Mr. G. E. Chambers of the Northfield Observatory, Eastbourne, writes that on Aug. 9 he discovered a very fine sun-spot measuring about 30,000 miles in diameter. He watched it up to the edge of the sun, and on the 15th it "turned the corner," so to speak, and probably might have been seen, if any one had looked for it, as a notch on the solar disk. By virtue of the sun's axial rotation it was due to reappear on the 29th, and Mr. Chambers had no difficulty in recognizing it. By now it is progressing sedately across the face of the disk, and should be a striking object. Many sun spots, it has been held, are apt to have an effect on the magnetic equilibrium of our planet, but the connection is not very clearly made out.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Peculiar Plant.

A plant grows in Assam, the botannical name of which is gymnema sylvestre, and which has the peculiar property, when chewed, of temporarily neutralizing the sense of taste as regards sweet and bitter things, while sour and saline substances remain unaltered. The Hindoos claim that the plant is an antidote to snake bite. However that may be, it is believed that the plant might be advantageously introduced in our pharmacopœia as a means of disguising the bitterness of quinine and other disagreeable medicines.

ARE YOU RUPTURED?

Attention is called to the ad of J. Y. Egan in another column. Mr. Egan is the leading Hernia Specialist in Canada and those suffering from rupture should avail themselves of his visit to Napanee. He may be seen, and consulted free at the Paisley House, Friday, Saturday, November, 5 and 6. Read the following testimony from your own neighborhood:

DEAR SIR—The instrument you fitted on me during your visit to Picton succeeded beyond my most ardent expectations. As a hotel man I had to be on my feet most of the time, weighing about two hundred pounds and my rupture being of long standing and as my physician intimated "a really serious case" caused me much anxiety and suffering. Having tried all the trusses in the market and none would even hold me for one hour. I had about abandoned every hope. I wore your grand appliance continually with great comfort. It held me from first to last and never shifted its position as all others did. I am now as sound as ever and can indulge in the heaviest exercise with perfect safety. I would strongly advise all sufferers from rupture not to postpone their case but call on you at once and be rid of this dangerous affliction.

Children 4 to 8 weeks. Adults 7 to 14. No Experimenting, Everything a Certainty

OF SPECIAL INTEREST TO SEVERE, LONG-STANDING CASES. REMEMBER—Age of person or length of time ruptured makes no difference. Every case a success. After 30 years' continuous practical experience I have produced the Grandest Instruments the World Ever Saw ! ! Knowing the true cause of Rupture, and having discovered the secret (at present known only to myself), Instantaneous Relief is Afforded, Safety is Assured and a Cure Effected—with little expense, no pain, loss of time or labor ; without the doubtful, HAZARDOUS and ever costly expedient of an operation. DON'T abandon HOPE —as I Offer you Great Encouragement ! Without egotism, I would say I am prepared to do what no other man in America can do, viz. Hold any reducible Hernia during the hardest work or severest strain—even horseback riding. Where failure has been the result in the United States and the large hospitals in the great cities of Europe, cases given up as hopeless, I alone succeeded. SING A SONG.

If you'll sing a song as you go along,
In the face of the real or the fancied wrong;
In spite of the doubt if you'll fight it out,
And show a heart that is brave and stout;
If you'll laugh at the jeers and refuse the tears,
That the world denies when the coward cries
You'll force the ever reluctant cheers
To give to the man who bravely tries;
And you'll win success with a little song—
If you sing the song as you go along!

If you'll sing a song as you plod along
You'll find that the busy, rushing thong
Will catch the strain of the glad refrain;
That the sun will follow the blinding rain;
That the clouds will fly from the blackened sky;
That the stars will come out by and bye
And you'll make new friends till hope descends
From where the placid rainbow bends;
And all because of a little song—
If you'll sing the song as you plod along!

If you'll sing a song as you trudge along
You'll see that the singing will make you strong;
And the heavy load and the rugged road
And the sting and the stripe of the tortuous goad
Will soar with the note that you set afloat,
That the beam will change to a trifling mote,
That the world is bad when you are sad,
And bright and beautiful when glad;
That all you need is a little song—
If you'll sing the song as you trudge along!

A FEW ANNOYANCES.

Vivid Description of One Day's Work in the Household by Simon's Wife

We have not had much company lately and have been too busy to go anywhere. I began to want to see somebody, so I coaxed Simon to go to church this morning. He tried to beg off because he had been working hard in the cornfield and wanted to stay at home for a good long nap. I was sorry afterwards that I did not let him, for he got so sleepy I had to keep an eye on him all the time, besides now and then slyly kicking his foot, or sitting up close enough to give him a hunch with my elbow under my cape. Then I remembered that the wash boiler sprung a leak last Monday and I had neglected sending it to the shop to be mended, so when I knew Simon was wide enough awake to avoid the disgrace of snoring my mind was busy with plans to get my washing done without a boiler, and I really understood very little of the sermon. But after it was over we stayed around as long as we could to visit, and came home feeling quite freshened up.

I believe I think as much of my family as most women, but I often wish they

A SCIENTIST SAVED

AN INTERVIEW WITH A COLLEGE PRESIDENT.

His Many Duties Caused His Health to Break Down — Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Restore Him to Activity.

From the Republican, Columbus, Ind.

The Hartsville College, situated at Hartsville, Indiana, was founded years ago in the interest of the United Brethren Church, when the state was mostly a wilderness, and colleges were scarce. The college is well known throughout the country, former students having gone into all parts of the world.

A reporter recently called at this famous seat of learning and was shown into the room of the president, Prof. Alvin P. Barnaby. When last seen by the reporter Prof. Barnaby was in delicate health. To-day he was apparently in the best of health. In response to an inquiry the professor said :

"Oh, yes, I am much better than for some time, I am now in perfect health, but my recovery was brought about in rather a peculiar way."

"Tell me about it," said the reporter.

"Well, to begin at the beginning," said the professor, "I studied too hard when at school, endeavoring to educate myself for the profession. After completing the common course I came here, and graduated from the theological course. I entered the ministry and accepted the charge of a United Brethren church at a small place in Kent County, Mich. Being of an ambitious nature, I applied myself

Hernia. I have known cases ruined for life by placing themselves in the hands of ignorant pretenders having not the slightest conception of the first principles of human anatomy. He who makes a specialty of one department must certainly be regarded as possessing more experience and better facilities for the treatment of any particular trouble—AND CERTAINLY MORE CAPABLE—than anyone having "many irons in the fire."

A WOMAN'S TRIUMPH.

She Managed Her Work So Well That It Equalled the Efforts of Professionals.

While it is well known that any woman of intelligence can do as good work with the Diamond Dyes, and at less than half the cost charged by professional dyers in city steam dye houses, yet there may be some people who doubt the statement. The following extracts from a letter written by Mrs. J. Gardner, of Owen Sound, Ont., prove that Diamond Dyes are unequalled:

"There was a man in our town going from house to house taking orders for a Toronto dye house for the dyeing of all kinds of garments and clothes. I had just taken off the line some goods that I had dyed with Diamond Dyes, and showed him that I could do as good work as any dye house. He honestly admitted that I was right about my work with Diamond Dyes.

"Having a large family, I use Diamond Dyes to economize. I have always the best of success with your dyes, and must say that I am more than delighted with your colors for dyeing cotton."

as most women, but I often wish they could all be out of the way till I got my work done up. One day last week I was in an awful hurry to get some baking done. I ran to the cellar for a cup of cream and was trying my best to reach the mixing pan before it dripped too much for me to hold and when I got to the pantry door I had to halt, for Simon and the children were in there holding council over a melon Katy had picked. Simon had the towel and was vigorously wiping his face and hands while he inspected the fruit. I hustled them all out of the way and they thought me cross and unsympathetic. I made my cookies that day from equal parts of sour cream and sugar, with a proper amount of soda, a little salt and nutmeg. They were so good that Simon and the children ate half the batch before I finished baking and the rest was gone in no time. They made such an ado over them that I had not the stamina to refuse so long as one was left. I was not too blind though to notice how much more ready they all were to mention my ill temper when I drove them out of the pantry, than they were to make a fuss over my goodness in allowing them to eat all my cookies.

The children let flies into the house, too, and that frets Lon. She insists on having tanglefoot everywhere, and it is a great nuisance; always ready to form unpleasant attachments.

Last year a sheet of it that she put in the woodhouse stuck fast to a turkey's tail and the poor fowl was trying to run away from it for two or three days. That made fun for the children and even Simon had a hearty laugh over it. Last week the stuff made another little episode for us. Lou had spread some upon the dining table. When supper time came she was flustered because company came and I was in the huckleberry swamp. In her hurry to get the paper out of the way she could think of no other place, so she slipped it into the plant window, on the floor. The plants were all out and the curtain drawn, so no one saw it.

That night Simon thought he heard something or somebody around the house, got up to look out, and just stepped into the plant window and—tanglefoot. He raised such a racket that it woke nearly everybody in the house.

The minister, who converted him once, was staying with us. If he understood what was said, he must have thought it high time the job was done over again. People used to have to take all the flies that came, except what they managed to trap in a tumbler of soap suds covered with a slice of sweetened bread, or smushed between a couple of shingles spread on the inside with molasses and suspended from the ceiling by a string. They lived to a good old age then, too, so I guess a dozen or two flies will not kill any of us now. At least I shall never wear myself out chasing after them.—Simon's Wife.

Cheerfulness

From the lowest point of view hope is very cheap, and gladness acts as a sovereign medicine. Sunshine has not a stronger effect in developing the beauty of flowers or the form of leaves than radiance of mind and lightness of heart in bringing forth all which is best in men and women. We have partly found this out as regards children, and society conspires nowadays to render their early years happy. The Japanese recognized that same high duty two thousand years ago, and possess, in consequence, the best-mannered and most joyous little ones in the world. But why stop at childhood? I should like to see the pastimes and recreations of the people made henceforth a department of administrative solicitude. I should like to have a minister of public amusement sitting in every cabinet, and municipal councils spending rates royally upon new popular pleasures of the right kind. There is nothing better than to be happy. Joy is the real root of morality; no virtue is worth praising which does not spring from minds contented and convinced, and free of dread and gloom; no religion was ever divine which relied on terror instead of love; and no philosophy will bear any good fruit which propounds despair and deduces annihilation.—Sir Edwin Arnold.

diligently to my work and studies. In time I noticed that my health was failing. My trouble was indigestion, and this with other troubles brought on nervousness.

"My physician prescribed for me for some time, and advised me to try a change of climate, I did as he requested and was some improved. Soon after, I came here as professor in physics and chemistry, and later was financial agent of this college. The change agreed with me, and for a while my health was better, but my duties were heavy, and again I found my trouble returning. This time it was more severe and in the winter I became completely prostrated. I tried various medicines and different physicians. Finally, I was able to return to my duties. In the spring of 1896 I was elected president of the college. Again I had considerable work, and the trouble which had not been entirely cured, began to affect me, and last fall I collapsed. I had different doctors, but none did me any good. Professor Bowman, who is professor of natural science, told me of his experience with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and urged me to give them a trial, because they had benefitted him in a similar case, and I concluded to try them.

"The first box helped me, and the second gave great relief, such as I had never experienced from the treatment of any physician. After using six boxes of the medicine I was entirely cured. To-day I am perfectly well. I feel better and stronger than for years. I certainly recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to similar sufferers and overworked people.

If I shall be elected jailer of Morgan county (you all know I am a candidate) I don't expect to make a law nor repeal one. I don't intend to enact a financial bill nor a tariff bill, but I do expect to execute that part of the Kentucky statutes that applies to the office of jailer. I will feed and care for the prisoners as best I can, and take care of the public buildings and keep them clean.

I have been voting for Democrats for local offices, more or less, all my life, and now I want some Democrats to vote for me, and, by gum, I must have them, for it's a ground-hog case. Harold Asked Eugene to Take His Place and There'll Be a Run.

When the Balder twins had finished their supper the other night Harold called Eugene into his room, and closing the door, said:

"Mother wants to talk to me about something this evening, Gene, but I am engaged for a spin out to Lincoln Park with another girl. Now, if you want to do me a good turn you'll represent me on this occasion."

"Certainly, if the girl don't object," answered Eugene, sweetly.

"None of your chaff—you know what I mean—take my place with mother."

"Thanks, awfully. I like that kind of an engagement. While you are out on a tandem with your best girl I am to stay here and be roasted. Nice prospect for the wrong twin."

"I have taken many a roasting for you from the gov'ner, Gene. Turn about is fair play."

"All right, Hal. But I wish it was the gov'ner instead of the mater—she is so awfully particular—and keeps a fellow forever. However, I'll stand by you this time. Only suppose she finds out."

"She won't," said Harold, and he hurried off, leaving Eugene as his proxy.

Mrs. Balder sat waiting for Harold, and when the wrong twin entered her presence with a silent step and subdued air, she said:

"I am glad, Harold, that you remembered my wish to speak to you this evening, as I have something particular to say, and I want you to be interested."

"Yes-m-m," mumbled Eugene, who almost lost his head in the start by trying to recall Harold's parental pose.

"I'd give something to know how he acts when he has a private and particular with the mater," he thought; "does he hang his feet over the back of the chair kind of easy, or sit up prim and proper?"—then he cleared his throat and stared gravely at his mother.

"It is about your brother Eugene I wish to speak," she said, and the wrong twin shot into the air and sat down again.

"I do wish you would be more dignified," urged Mrs. Balder; "now that you are engaged to be married you should cultivate more repose of manner. You act as flippant as your brother."

"Well, I like that," said Eugene, forgetting for a moment his role of Harold, but his mother continued.

"I have enough frivolity to contend with in his character, and it is of that I wish to speak to-night. Eugene is much to giddy for his age, and I want you to help me improve him."

"Oh, Gene is all right!" said the wrong twin.

"I would be glad if he took more interest in the society of girls," said Mrs. Balder.

"Is there a society of that name?" asked Eugene innocently.

"When you are married," resumed his mother, ignoring the question, "I shall hope or a great deal of assistance from your wife's influence. Nothing steadies a young man down like having good woman friends."

Here it occurred to the wrong twin to put in a good word for himself.

"Why is it necessary to steady Gene down?" he asked in Harold's best manner.

"Why, I am sure my son, you are always complaining of him," said Mrs. Balder, and Eugene announced to himself that he had it in for Harold. But he said in a conciliatory tone:

"Mere boyish pranks, mother. Eugene is a good fellow enough as boys go—I have yet to hear of him doing a dishonorable thing. How could he after such lessons as you have given. (I would like to wring Harold's neck.) I really think you can trust him to come out all right. (Some day he'll prove another Cain.) I will look after him myself, and advise him if I see him going wrong."

"Spoken like my own Harold," said the mother with fervor. "I love you both, but I cannot close my eyes to Eugene's thoughtlessness, and I look to you to reform him."

Then she kissed the wrong twin for his brother and dismissed him, and Eugene fell over himself in getting out of the room, while he concocted dark schemes of vengeance against Harold, and as he revolved them in his mind he laughed and chuckled like a fiend.—Chicago Times-Herald.

GRIPPE.

Never had it? then the world is all before you!
Just recovered? then there's naught for me to tell.
But for me, I've arisen
From a grim and grippy prison,
And desire in me is welling
All the world to be a-telling
Of my singular sensations,
My extreme exacerbations,
My unbounded irritations
And intense exasperations.

First of all, a sudden shiver,
Like a ripple on the river,
Sets your narrow all a-quiver,
Without any cause whatever,
And from thence go hurry-scurry,
Helter-skelter, flirry-scurry,
Darting, little icy particles
Through the nine-and-thirty articles
(Rather more or rather less),
That your body may possess.
And your teeth begin to chatter—
Though the speech is no great matter—
Half a groan and half a grumble,
As the shawls you clutch and fumble.
And you cower, shaking, quaking,
When—your teeth set up an aching!
Cuspid, molar, each one taking
His peculiar line of deviltry,
As in some infernal revelry,
With a throbbing and a jobbing,
And a driving and a riving,
And a stabbing and a jabbing,
And a jerking and a dirking,
As if all were Greek-and-Turking,
And a nagging and a jagging,
And a darting and a smarting,
As of soul and body parting.
Then your head takes up the story
Crying: "I will ache for glory!
I will ache with such an aching
As the world shall be awaking;
Fame shall sit upon my banner,
To have ached in such a manner!"
And it aches! till every brain-cell
Is transfigured to a pain-cell;
Till cerebrum, cerebellum,
To balloons of anguish swell 'em,
And medulla oblangata,
Wears the crown of saint and martyr.
Then your knees ache; and your nose aches;
And each smallest of your toes aches;
And your throat's a ring of iron
Which your tongue lies parched and dry on;

Now your feet they fall from under!
Now your backbone drops asunder!
Now your whole articulation
Creaks and groans like all creation,
As a wave of fever fills you,
And engulfs you and enthrills you,
Till you sink beneath the billows,
Sink, and, clutching at the pillows,
Yield to dissolution, crying:
"Bring the doctor! quick! I'm dying!

In reply Abner merely blinked at her in a helpless sort of way and went on writing dunning letters to delinquent subscribers. Chicago Tribune.

were a hundred other guests booked in a like manner. The springs were never a fashionable resort, but you will always find a lot of people there who are financially solid. I was on the verandah when the widow drove up in the 'bus, and I sized her up as follows:

"Age about 27, fine figure; second year of widowhood; handsome face; intellectual and entertaining; probably got at least $50,000 life insurance when Hendricks shuffled off; she'll do to cultivate."

I was a bachelor, you understand, and at liberty to flirt, make love or marry. It was said that I was a good-looking bachelor, and, though I was bothered with rheumatism in my left knee just then, it didn't interfere materially with the grace of my carriage. I flattered myself that I attracted the widow's attention, and was glad to note that several other bachelors or widowers were a bit jealous of me. We got her history, or rather a few details, from one of the hotel clerks. She was worth half a million dollars, and lived in Cincinnati. Her sister and brother-in-law would appear later. She had twinges of rheumatism in her left knee, and would take a few baths before sailing for Europe to be gone a year.

For two days the fair young widow avoided us; but on the third day, to my great satisfaction, she was given a seat at my table in the dining-room. Not only that, but next to me; and she had not given the waiter her order when I introduced myself and managed to add a few honeyed words to please her self-esteem. She gave me her name in return, and the fact that we were both suffering from rheumatism in the same knee served as a bond to draw us together. I admired her from the start; by the time her poached egg was brought I thought I could love her; before her coffee was gone I had determined to marry her or perish in the attempt. For two days I had the Widow Hendricks to myself, and I was so selfish that I would not introduce her to any possible rivals, even though they got in the way a dozen times per day. She gave me to understand that she was glad I was at the springs. She had inquired about me, she said, and found that I was a man above reproach.

I was getting along swimmingly when the widow gave me a sort of throwdown. That is, she gave four or five others opportunities to introduce themselves; and one afternoon I found her promenading the verandah on the arm of old Jones, the man I despised above all the other guests. He was a merchant from some place or other, and probably a very nice man, but I despised him because it was rumored that he was a widower who wanted to get married again. I chided the widow for walking with Jones, and for talking Rome and Venice with a young squirt of a fellow named Hawkins, and for bowing to a millionaire bachelor with rheumatism in the ankles; but she squeezed my hand, and laughingly replied:

"Don't be a goose. Of all the men here I think you the nicest, but a woman must render herself agreeable to all, you know. You just be a good boy, and don't get jealous."

She permitted about a dozen men to cultivate her acquaintance, and while I was jealous of each and every one and ached to bang the heads of the whole lot, I took a grim pleasure in the feeling that I was boss of all, and had the joker in my hand. I even introduced her to two or three parties in order to have the satisfaction of pitying them afterwards.

The women did not take kindly to the Widow Hendricks, nor did she cultivate them. While woman is woman's worst enemy, it takes a woman to correctly size up on of her own sex. The women called Mrs. Hendricks superficial, flirtatious, conceited and all that. They also said she was tricky, and, but for fear of the law, would have called her an adventuress. Perhaps some of them did, to their husbands, but if so their husbands answered:

"Now, my dear, stop right there. You are jealous of her good looks and fine figure, but don't carry the thing too far. She has a right to amuse herself, and that's all she's doing."

The Widow Hendricks had no reason to be dissatisfied with the attentions she received. She was a sun around which thirteen different stars began to revolve as soon as she made her appearance on the verandah, and it was almost a fight as to who should escort her for a walk or into the dining-room. In fact, things went so far that I got mad, and perhaps I should have paid my bill and suffered on with the rheumatism had not she sent for me to join her in her private parlor. She knew I was put out, and she squeezed my hand and sat down close beside me and began:

"Now, George (for the first time), you are angry at me, and I can't tell you how grieved I am. I know you to be the dearest fellow in the world, and to prove how much I like you I am going to ask a great favor of you. I'd die before I'd ask it of any other man on earth. George (squeeze) will you grant it? There is no one about, and I think you may—may—"

I kissed her, of course. That was 20 years ago, but I remember it yet. It was a long, lingering kiss on the cheek, and I did not feel any rheumatism for three days after. Then I told her to ask me for my horse, my dog, my razor or my fortune, and I would break my neck to serve her.

"That is like you, my dear old fellow," said she. "Well, the truth is, I owe my dressmaker $600. I sent her a cheque for the amount before leaving home, but she sends it back and wants the money. You know how queer some people are; she probably never cashed a cheque in her life. If you could—"

If I could let her have $600 in cash she would express it to her dressmaker. Why, of course, I had transferred $2000 to the local bank, and she should have $600 early next forenoon. Didn't she want $700—$800—$1000?

"What a noble man!" she murmured.

When the bank opened next morning I drew out an even $1000, returned to the hotel, and handed it to her with my compliments. She smiled and laughed and called me pet names, but when I offered to go with her to the express office she put me off. I didn't spy on her, of course, but I couldn't find out that she went out alone that day or any other day.

Next day after drawing the money I wanted her to go driving, but she had a headache. I wandered off alone, and returned just in time to catch old Jones coming out of that private parlor, and to see the widow flitting out of the rear door. I forced back my suspicions, deemed them unworthy, and never knew the worst until Jones owned up to it. She had sent for him to ask a great favor. She had also squeezed his hand—a hand like a lam—and the old jay had also imprinted a long, lingering kiss on her cheek. She hadn't worked the dressmaker dodge on him; it was interest due on a mortgage, and she had forgotten all about it. Jones was a business man, and maybe he suggested her sending a cheque drawn on her own local bank; but if he did she had some excuse to satisfy him. At any rate, he lent her $750 and had to draw on his own bank for more.

A day later the little widow tackled that squirt of a Hawkins. Squirts don't have ready cash as a rule, but this one happened to have $10,000 which had come to him as a legacy. He had been fool enough to bring half of it with him and hand it over to the hotel safe; and though he tried to lie out of it, I believe he was easy picking. When the widow got him into that private parlor and called him Fitzy and squeezed his hand he went all to pieces, and when he was permitted to kiss her peachy cheek the infernal idiot just ached to die for her. What she was after, however, was cold cash. One of her lady friends in Boston wanted a loan of $2000 for a week, and as the widow didn't have it by her, and yet awfully wanted to oblige, she was compelled to ask for a loan. She would give Fitzy $15,000 worth of diamonds to hold as security—having them in the hotel safe—but of course he wouldn't think of such a thing. He ran down and got the money, and was so tickled to be of service that he would have stood on his head if she had given the sign.

The millionaire bachelor with the swollen ankles was the next victim. His ankles were much better, but his heart was in a bad way. The wretched idiot had fallen in love with the widow, and he had just figured out to his own satisfaction that he hadn't one show in a million, when a little pink note was placed in his hand and he was almost lifted out of his chair. He was asked to meet the widow in that same parlor, and he didn't lose any valuable time getting there. As his first name was Samuel I suppose the woman called him "Sammy," and she probably squeezed his hand and made as big a fool of him as in the other cases. He wouldn't be confidential with the rest of us after it was all over and we were comparing notes, and so I can't tell what excuse she put forward to borrow money. He owned up that he handed over $1500 in the long green, and would have made it more had it been asked for.

Taken altogether there were 11 victims. One by one we entered that private parlor to be made fools of and plucked. The lowest sum received by the widow was $300. The highest sum handed over was that of Fitzy—who threatned to commit suicide, but finally turned to cigarettes. The sum total was a little over $10,000, but in casting it up we did not mind the odd hundreds.

A quarter of a mile in rear of the hotel was a sylvan grove and a lake. Each and every one of us was invited to meet the widow beside the lake at a certain hour. We were on hand to the last man. Some of us walked around and glared at each other, and some of us sat down on the benches and smiled knowingly to ourselves. The hour passed, but none of us left. It was three hours past the appointed time before anyone became suspicious, and then we moved to the hotel in a body to find the widow gone. She had taken a train at the very hour she was to meet us, and with her had gone our cash. Old Jones called her an adventuress, and voted to pursue and arrest her, but we voted him down by a large majority, and decided not to make fools of ourselves any further. In fact, we decided to become liars instead, and during the rest of our stay we boldly denied that any of us had cared anything for the widow or

IT IS TO BE A FUR WINTER.

Some Very Chic Creations in Sable, Mink and Ermine.

This is to be a fur winter, and fancy braids and jet passementerie are not to take the place of sable and fox, ermine and chinchilla. They are simply to form the basis of rich toilets, but the finishing touches are to be of fur. Capes of plaited satin and plaited velvet have collar pelerines which just cover the shoulders like yokes, of grebe and mouffion, sable Arctic fox, seal or mink. Sable never looks so beautiful as when used in conjunction with rich velvet and brocades, and is therefore especially appropriate for evening cloaks. A mantle of misted blue velvet in a deep but brilliant shade is cut in circular shape and bordered with sable tails. The Elizabethan collar is continued in long narrow revers down the front. The linings of the costly wraps are almost as rich as the outside, and this one of blue velvet is lined with white brocade with a large design of lilies and lily leaves traced in silver thread.

A gorgeous garment is of pale pink brocade with clusters of white and mauve lilacs scattered over the surface.

THE RESPECT PAID TO WOMEN.

W.T. STEAD COMPARES THEIR PLACE IN BRITAIN AND THE U.S.

American Cheap Courtesy — Less Show But More Respect in Britain—England's Queen an Example of the National Feeling—Cruel Forbearance.

The question which you have submitted to me is one which is extremely difficult to answer with candor and without offence. You ask me to define what seems to me the difference between the respect paid to woman in England and the United States. To answer this question exhaustively and accurately would be to anticipate the verdict of the last day upon our respective civilizations. For there is no more authentic gauge or metre-wand of civilization than the position which they accord to woman. Woman is nearer the divine than man. Hence to ask, What think you of woman? is to demand an answer which will reveal how much the answerer has been evolved from brutality, how far he has ascended the unending spiral which leads from clay to deity.

Judged by this test there are millions alike of Americans and of English who can hardly be regarded as civilized at all. Woman is to these masses if poor a mere drudge, if rich a mere plaything, as she has been through long past ages of slow developments and as she is still to-day in more than one-half the nations of the world. But there is no use considering these aboriginals. The only way is to arrive at an estimate of the difference between the respect shown to women in England and America is to compare the way in which the best people in each country—those who have made the furthest advance from that barbarism which welters abysmal round the base of all our civilization—regard their women.

I am afraid that I shall be in danger of being stoned in your market place if I express my frank opinion, but as you demand it I must run the risk.

My opportunities of observation have, of course, been very limited, but so far as they have gone the sum and substance of my conclusion is that the American woman has far more of superficial respect than her English sister, but that English women, if they receive less of the small change of outward courtesy, do nevertheless receive much more solid and serious respect and consideration than American women enjoy. This may be heresy in your eyes, but I speak as I have seen and as I believe.

I don't underestimate the small change of civilities, Englishmen of the old school are in this respect far and away the superior of the young and less ceremonious generation. It is an object lesson in good manners to see the courtly courtesy, which Mr. Gladstone, for instance, will pay to any woman. And I was much impressed the first time I ever met Mr. Carlyle to see the same stately, ceremonial politeness displayed by the rugged, old Scotch peasant-born philosopher that graces the bearing of the most punctilious courtier. But, after all, these bows and compliments, though graceful and pleasant are but the tithe of mint and anise and cumin. They can, too, exist very often side by side with the profoundest contempt for woman whenever she essays to be anything but the mere ornamental auxiliary of man.

There is indeed some truth in the paradox that a certain apparent lack of ceremony in the treatment of women is often the index of the reality of an underlying respect. Men who are real friends, comrades who risk their lives together in the ranks, do not stand on ceremonies. The intense and intimate of their regard for each other transcends the needs for those more or less symbolic methods of indicating respect. So it is with women. When you meet a woman as an equal intellectually and as a real force in the work of the world the more close your union the more absurd and unnecessary will seem the paraphernalia of conventional courtesy. These things are good to symbolize respect, but when you have the thing itself the trappings are apt to appear superfluous.

The time is rapidly passing. I am writing on the Teutonic as she is steaming down to Sandy Hook and I cannot do more than indicate three things in which I think the difference between the two nations in their respect for women may be noted.

(1) The English are not ashamed to place a woman high above all the politicians, to keep her there for 60 years and to give her a direct and most potent voice in settling all the great affairs of state, from dealing with which in the American Republic women are debarred. You may say the Queen is only a figurehead. If so, she is much the liveliest and most intelligent

No woman has the right to be a helpless, sick, nervous, fretful burden to her husband. If she is, it is due to her own ignorance or neglect. If she will take proper care of herself and look after the health of the delicate organs that are the most important parts of her physical make-up, she will soon be a healthy, amiable helpmate, instead of a burden to the partner of her joys and sorrows. No women who suffers from weakness and disease of the distinctly womanly organism can be a good, helpful wife to an ambitious man. It is easy to keep these organs healthy and vigorous.

The most wonderful medicine for women is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It acts directly on the organs that make her a woman. It cures all weakness and disease. It allays inflammation, soothes pain, and permits the tortured nerves to resume their natural condition. It stops all weakening drains and the woman who has hitherto been nervous, weak and fretful becomes robust, helpful and happy. Thousands of happy women, who were once pain-tortured and miserable, testify to its virtues. All good druggists sell it.

"I write you these few lines to let you know the good your 'Favorite Prescription' did my wife," writes Dennis H. Connelly, Esq., of Clear Water, Wright Co., Minn. "Previous to motherhood she was very sick. She could not do her own work until she took two bottles of 'Favorite Prescription.' She took her Doctor's medicine but it did her no good. Your medicine is the best my wife ever had."

Have you a good reliable medical book in the house? There ought to be one in every family in the world. Of all the medical books published there is not one so comprehensive and reliable as Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. In all its 1,008 pages there is not one sentence that may not be readily understood. No physician in the world has been a greater benefactor than has Dr. Pierce. The best he knows is in this book. It is illustrated with over 300 plates and drawings. It talks about hundreds of ailments and tells you how to cure them. You may have this book for the cost of mailing it. For the book in paper covers send 21 one-cent stamps, to cover the cost of customs and mailing only. For cloth cover send 50 stamps. World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

SANG PRAISES OF THE GOAT.

Mrs. Mulvany Was Glad She Had It But Would Sell It to a Friend.

"Good mornin', Mrs. Mulvany, I do be hearin' your man has bought a new milch goat."

"Thrue for you, he has thot," said Mrs. Mulvany, "an' how I ever got along wid all them children an' widout thot goat I can't tell. It's as good as a cow in the family any day."

"Do the childer take to goat's milk, Mrs. Mulvany?"

"Sorra a sup of it have they tasted yet, the darlints."

"But—"

"Faith it don't, then. It's as gentle as a pig and twice as intilligent."

"What I would be after knowin', Mrs. Mulvany, is why you don't dhrink the milk?"

"Wurra, Mrs. McCarty, where do be the sinse of dhrinkin' the milk whin goat's milk cheese is at a premium in the sthores?"

"Oh, it's cheese you do be makin'? Might I put me two eyes on one of 'em cheeses for a thrate now?"

"Hummm! I don't moind tellin' yees thot I haven't got me hand in wid the cheese so as to be offerin' it to me friends yet. You shall have the first choice, Mrs. McCarty, though them delicatessen sthores do be wantin' all I can make, an' more, too."

"What's that awful noise, Mrs. Mulvany?"

"Nothin', sure, but thot blissid goat! It's thot divertin' it makes me laugh till I'm tired to see its antics. A family isn't complate widout a goat."

"Whativer has become of the children?" asked the neighbor looking about her.

"Whisht! The darlints do be hidin' on the roof of the house wid the chimney betwixt them an' the goat. It do be thim yees is after hearin' make believe cry. Thot goat he! ha! Mrs. McCarty, it can climb to the ridge pole like a cat. D'ye hear its little fat goin' kilketty. Klimp on the roof. It runs up an' down all night, an' me man he says it moinds him of the days in Tipperary whin the boys wakened him up for a lark by throwin' stones on the roof. It do be wonderful the ass-cashuns thot goat brings up."

"Well, Mrs. Mulvany, I must be goin'," said her neighbor, rising to leave, while the children screamed louder and the goat's feet beat a more vigorous protest on the roof. "I'm glad you have such a valuable addition to the family. I may be after buyin' a goat meself who knows?"

"Buy mine," said Mrs. Mulvany in a husky whisper. "I would sell it cheap after we become too fond of the dar-stay we boldly denied that any of us had cared anything for the widow or had lent her a dollar.

Five years later, while I was at another spring—this time a cold one—for the benefit of my digestion, a lady and gentleman drove up one evening from the depot, and I at once recognized the Widow Hendricks. She was just as young and cute and pretty as ever, but I took it that she had been married since I saw her last. I didn't put myself forward at all, but after supper she ran across me on the verandah, and uttering a little exclamation of glad surprise reached out both hands and said:

"Why, Mr. Renfrew—George—how do you do! Why, I haven't met you since——"

"Madam, I beg your pardon," I interrupted, "but you seem to have made a mistake."

"But you are—are George?"

"No, madam. My name is Boggs—Abraham Boggs, Esq., dealer in grindstones, green hides and guano."

"And you never lent me a thousand dollars to pay my dressmaker?"

"Never! That isn't Abraham Boggs!"

"But you——"

"Boggs, madam—Boggs. I simply happen to look like Mr. Renfrew, who was probably some sentimental idiot, and your mistake is excusable. Try some one else, madam—good night!"

No Help For Him.

Poor fellow! He was all in. Tears coursed down his cheeks, and he would not be comforted.

"Come," said one of his friends, "brace up, old man. It's too bad that the banquet was too much for you last night and that you fell by the wayside, but that's liable to happen to almost any of us. Of course they'll discharge you when they find out how it was, and you needn't worry any about the money if they do fine you. We'll see that you get out of it all right."

"Oh," cried the disconsolate one, "I'll never be able to live this down. It's awful nice of you boys to try to help me out, but what has been done can't be undone."

"Pshaw! Others have been arrested by mistake before you, and got out of it all right. Why can't you do the same?"

"It isn't the arrest," he sobbed. "I don't care for that. But here it's nine o'clock in the morning and I've got my dress suit on!"

Then he buried his face in his hands and the others were silent. They knew that he was ruined forever.—Cleveland Leader.

brocade with clusters of white and mauve lilacs scattered over the surface. The lining is of sable, and a rolling collar of sable has ruffles of lace inside, and is fastened with a huge hook and eye of diamonds.

Another beautiful evening wrap—these so-called evening mantles are worn, also, for carriage calls and with very handsome afternoon toilets—is of chinchilla, lined with ermine. It has a rolling collar, a yoke and a deep frill of fur over the cape proper, which falls below the waist.

A jaunty little out-door cape is made of sealskin, with high collar and pointed yoke. The yoke is edged by a full ruffle of soft gray chinchilla.

No Birds on Women's Hats

Woman has won her crusade against the slaughter of the song bird for the purposes of the milliner. The fall season is now in full swing and the feature of the display of hats and bonnets is the almost total disappearance of anything in the way of plumage that in life had a musical voice. The change is not a matter of conscience with the milliner. Fashion has been fairly beaten and there is little or no demand for what was once all the style.

The fight was on for years and the crusade progressed slowly, but the women have won a decisive victory at last and the song bird henceforth goes unmolested. The change is radical. It was only a short time ago that a woman found it next to impossible to purchase a hat that did not have from one to three of the songsters on it. And when she protested and declared that she would not buy the hat unless something was substituted in the way of decoration the scorn on the milliner's face was a study for a genre painter. Now, many of the big stores make a point of the fact that there is not "a song bird" hat in the establishment.

The fashionable colors this fall are brown, gray, castor, which is a grayish-brown, and tan. But the very swellest hat of all is black. It is the most expensive, too, for it must be made of velvet and loaded with ostrich feathers. Not the short Prince of Wales tips, either, for they are hopelessly passe, but the old-time plume, which is large enough to cover the side of an ordinary hat and droop over the brim besides.

Modish Sleeves and Skirts.

The small gigot sleeves, with double epaulettes, edged with Chantilly, are worn, as they give width to the shoulders and pretty lines to the shoulders. Long-wristed sleeves have fewer lace frillings attached than they had during the last part of the summer, and the latest style shows the bottom untrimmed, but it flares over the hand, having inside mousseline de soie frills. These keep the wrists in perfect shape and give the inside a dainty finish.

Crumpled sleeves suit many arms, and so remain in vogue, being simply made and draped at the top.

All readily admit that there are to be several points of difference in the making of the skirts this season. However, but few are aware that in one of the latest designs the folds of the skirt hang to the feet, and this is the most noticeable feature of fashion at the present time; and all skirts are narrower, and seldom is a very wide skirt seen on any occasion; but the widest are cut in one piece, circular, and this style is not to be attempted by any dressmaker not a genius in skirt hanging. These facts should be carefully noted. There are fewer gores—never more than five.

The front and side breadths are much straighter but still fit tightly over the hips, all fullness being carried well to the back, where it is laid in small box-pleats.

Novel Weaves and Colors

Shot silks are out of style, so if you desire to use one left over from last season in good condition wear it under a muslin, a grenadine or any other transparent fabric. Much plaid taffeta will be worn and the popular shades will be Parma violet, torquoise blue, moss greens, numerous shades of red and pink. For evening wear lovely are the hues obtainable in good qualities of poult de soie, which is to be a popular fabric. Old rose, lime green, vert lumiere (the new grass-green color) and peach are thoroughly appreciated by stylish women.

The new moire has the pattern now carried across the silk, like mother-of-pearl, in an almost indescribable zigzag which has a different effect in every light; some are striped and other spotted.

There are numerous zigzag ribbon effects, not only in moires, but in other silks as well, and satin-edged stripes are certainly effective. They are also seen on moire and silk lattice-work patterns, and in some extremely handsome brocades tinsel is employed.

Much satin will be worn by both matrons and young girls in the evening, but for the very youthful the popline Francaise and simple armures, in delicate shades, will be liked.

debarred. You may say the Queen is only a figurehead. If so, she is much the liveliest and most prominent figurehead in history.

The charge of being such a figurehead is denied by your constitution and customs to the ablest person of the States if she should chance to be born a woman.

(2) No American gentleman ever ventures to contradict a woman. He will listen with imperturbable politeness to some fine lady friend talking the most palpable nonsense about a subject which he knows at his fingers' end. But he allows her to meander on only when she ceases and quits the room the expressive shrug of the shoulders and sigh of relief bear testimony to his forbearance. It is a cruel forbearance based upon a radical lack of respect. When a woman makes a fool of herself by making statements that are not correct, drawing illogical conclusions and generally displaying a somewhat retarded intellectual development, it is very false kindness to let them revel in the mistaken belief that they are true and well founded, whereas in reality they are foolish and most ignorant. No man would feel he was being treated with respect if he was not pulled up sharp when he made a fool of himself, because, forsooth, of the respect due his sex. Such false courtesy and forbearance are in reality the subtlest form of insult. Until you can discuss with a woman as free and contradict her as frankly as a man she can never feel that she is regarded as other than a child, an engaging fascinating creature no doubt, but not a person to be taken seriously as a practical factor is this rough, workaday world.

(3) The greatest difficulty which women have to contend with in journalism and in other branches of work is this pseudo respect which compels her employers to accord to her a less severe treatment than that accorded to man.

"I never employ women," said an editor once. "Never! You cannot say 'damn' to a woman." He didn't say "damn" to men either, but what he meant was sound. He means that women too often resent having their knuckles rapped when they make a mess of their work, that they expect to be let off easy because of their sex—in other words, that their work instead of being judged as work is always to be judged as mere woman's work. Now that is not to my thinking true respect. But the pilot is leaving, so I must stop. —W. T. Stead, in New York World.

Byron as He Was.

"His character and his conduct presented unceasing contradictions; it seemed as if two different souls occupied his body alternately. One was feminine and full of sympathy; the other masculine and characterized by a clear judgment. When one soul arrived the other departed. In company, his sympathetic soul was his tyrant; alone, or with a single person, his masculine prudence displayed itself. No man could then arrange facts, investigate their causes or examine their consequences with more logical accuracy or a more practical spirit. Yet, in his most sagacious moment, the entrance of a third person would derange the order of his ideas; judgment fled, and sympathy (generally laughing) took its place. Hence he appeared in his conduct extremely capricious, while in his opinions he had great firmness. Often, however, he displayed a feminine turn for deception in trifles, while at the same time he possessed a feminine candor of soul and a natural love of truth which made him often despise himself quite as much as he despised others for what he called brazen hypocrisy.—From "Lord Byron, in the Greek Revolution," by F. B. Sanborn, in Scribner's.

His First Chance.

"Is there a man in all the audience," demanded the female speaker on woman's right, fiercely, "that has ever done anything to lighten the burden resting on his wife's shoulders? Is there a man here," she continued, folding her arms and looking over her audience with superb scorn, "that has ever got up in the morning, leaving his tired, wornout wife to enjoy her slumbers, gone quietly downstairs, made the fire, cooked his own breakfast, sewn the missing buttons on the children's shoes, darned the family stockings, scoured the pots and kettles, cleaned and filled the lamps, swept the kitchen, and done all this, if necessary, day after day uncomplainingly? If there is such a man in this audience, let him stand up. I should like to see him."

And far back in the hall a mild-looking man in spectacles, in obedience to the summons, timidly arose. He was the husband of the eloquent speaker. It was the first chance he had ever had to assert himself.—Tid-Bits.

"Buy mojine," said Mrs. Mulvany in a husky whisper. "I would sell it cheap afore we become too fond of the darlint. Why it's thot divertin' you'd never pass a lonely hour, an' look at the valiy of it! Sure, it's the most aristocratic of all pets."

Mrs. McCarty said she would think about it, but as the goat came down from Mrs. Mulvany's roof and chased her home, she is probably thinking of it yet.

Decoy Ducks.

A Napanee man had an experience last Sunday that he does not wish duplicated. He purchased seven wild ducks on the market on Saturday. At dinner on Sunday four of the ducks were dished up for his refection by his wife. Judge of his surprise when he essayed to carve the birds they proved invulnerable to the attack of knife and fork. He learned afterwards that they were of the species, commonly called "hell divers" and the only known way of dissecting them is with dynamite. The citizen took the remaining three ducks down town on Monday and sold them to one of our local sports, who is somewhat of a nimrod. The young man was so elated over his purchase that he took them to his boarding house and ordered the cook to fix them up for his dinner. He demonstrated to the lady how the birds had succumbed to his unerring aim and left her with a satisfied smile on his face. The cook, who has had some experience in the fowl line, quietly hung them up on a clothes line in the back yard, and it is her intention to use the skins for shoe laces when they are sufficiently tanned.

Both Burned To Death.

A Tweed despatch says that the village of Bridgewater, five miles north of there, is in a state of mourning over the horrible death which overtook little Beatrice and Ethel Eagar, aged 6 and 9 years respectively, while sound asleep at an early hour on Saturday morning. The children were visiting an aunt in Bridgewater, who put them to bed about 9 o'clock, and then locked the house, and retired to spend the night at the bedside of a sick neighbor. At two o'clock flames were seen issuing from the rear of Mrs. Eager's residence, and in a few secends the entire house was engulfed in flames. Mrs. Eager was one of the first to arrive on the scene, and rushed through the roaring flames to the stairway to rescue the children. As she burst open the door the flames rushed past her, and in an instant the upstairs was a seething furnace. Her two boys slept in the first room, but before Mrs. Eager had reached the room one of them had leaped from the window. Seizing the other she threw him through the open window, and then made a mad ruch to rescue the girls, who were sound asleep, little dreaming of the awful death that awaited them. On the way she was overcome by the heat and in a few seconds her clothes caught fire. Stunned, burned and blinded, she fell to the floor, and groped her way to the window and threw herself to the ground, where willing hands came to her rescue and tore the burning clothes from her body. All efforts to save the children were useless, and in another instant the roof fell in, brrying the bodies of the unfortunate children in the burning embers. Mrs. Eager was terribly burned about the arms and face, and at the present it is impossible for her medical attendant

Napanee Gaol Statistics for the year ending 30th Sept. 1897.

We glean the following from Governor Vanluven's yearly report of the Napanee gaol for the year ending Sept. 30 h, 1897. On Oct. 1st, 1896, there were 2 male prisoners remaining in custody. The number of persons committed during the year, ending 30th Sept., 1897, was 50, 41 males and 9 females. Of this number 26 males and 9 females were committed for the first time, 3 males for the second time and 10 for the third time. Of the males 1 was committed upon civil processes, 1 was acquitted on trial and discharged, 8 were discharged without trial, 1 discharged upon suspended sentence, 2 are now awaiting trial, and the number sentenced for any period and by all courts was 26 males and 8 females. One female was discharged on suspended sentence. Only one prisoner was sentenced direct to the Central Prison and two to the penitentiary. One female was sentenced to the Mercer Reformatory, and one died in gaol while undergoing sentence. 23 males and 6 females are now retained in gaol until the expiration of sentence. Of the prisoners 6 males were sentenced for a peroid of 30 days, 8 males and 2 females for periods between 30 and 60 days, and 2 males and 2 females for 2 months. For peroids ranging between three and four months, 5 males and 3 females. Three males were sentenced for 6 months, 1 for 1 year, and 2 males were sent to the penitentiary for two years. The number of prisoners committed whose expenses were defrayed by the government--17 males and 1 female, while 23 males and 7 females were maintained by the municipalities. Of the prisoners confined 29 males and 9 females were Canadians. The remainder were males and their nationalities are given as follows: 1 English, 2 Irish, 2 Scotch, and 5 from the United States. Ten were Roman Catholics, 7 Church of England, 8 Presbyterians, and 22 Methodists. Twenty of the prisoners were married and 28 unmarried, two of the females being married and the remaining seven single. Seven males and 3 females could neither read nor write. Twenty-five were reported temperate and 23 intemperate. The cost of maintaining the gaol during the year, including salaries and repairs was $1 748 68. The daily cost per prisoner for rations was 9¼ cents. The greatest number of prisoners confined at any time during the year was 11 and the lowest 2. On the evening of Sept. 30th, there was 8 prisoners in gaol, 4 males and 4 females. Of this number 2 males are awaiting trial, 2 are undergoing a two months sentence and the 4 females are there for a period of 2 months and over. The offences for which the prisoners were committed are as follows:

" felonious	1	0
Abduction	2	0
Contempt of court	2	0
Drunk and disorderly	5	0
Horse, cattle or sheep stealing	1	0
Inmates or frequenters of house of ill fame	0	3
Keeping house of ill fame	0	1
Larceny	7	0
Lunatics	1	0
Manslaughter	1	0
Other offences	3	3

The occupations of the prisoners are as follows: Of the males there was 1 commercial traveller, 1 baker, 1 bartender, 1 boy, 1 butcher, 1 carpenter, 7 farmers, 21 labourers, 2 sailors, 1 tailor. Of the females 8 were servants and a washwoman.

The Struggle for the Cup.

On Saturday last the steamer Nellie Cuthbert steamed into port having on board the senior and junior foot ball clubs of the Picton High School. The Picton boys were accompanied by over 100 enthusiastic supporters, including a number of the fair sex of our neighboring town, who came over to root for their favorites. The struggle was for the Quinte Cup which the Napanee Collegiate Institute has so successfully defended for the past few years. Picton came over flushed with their victory on the preceding Saturday and determined

THE AFTER-MATH

OF THE PONTON TRIAL.

The excitement over the Ponton trial has subsided and the mystery surrounding the robbery of the Dominion Bank is no nearer a solution. Many theories and conjectures as to the probable manner in which the job was accomplished have been advanced, but the one which THE EXPRESS had the distinction of first promulgating and which connected the tramps, who were camped on Hawley's Point during the summer, with the burglary, is the one most generally accepted. In connection with this the following from the Oshawa Vindicator will prove of interest:—

J. S. Murray, who returned recently from his trip to Scotland, stopped the Vindicator man on the street and inquired when the Napanee bank robbery occurred. He was told on the night of August 27th, whereupon he stated that the steamer Scotsman, which left Montreal on August 28th, contained two foreigners. One had shipped for Copenhagen, the other for Berlin. One was a steerage, the other an intermediate passenger. They had plenty of money, and spent it freely. He noticed particularly that they kept apart, and did not appear to have anything in common with each other, but were often together in quiet parts of the ship, and would separate when a third party approached. One was tall and slight in build, the other short and thick-set, with a blonde face. He was a German. The tall man had a dark chin whisker and had several tools in his pockets, and claimed that his mechanical ingenuity had been employed in handling patent rights, and his success in that line accounted for his abundant supply of money. Both men kept a close eye on their bunks and whenever anyone approached their sleeping-place the passengers were soon on hand.

Mr. Murray said he was particularly impressed with their freedom with money, and it was not until Tuesday that the thought occurred to him that they might have got their money in Napanee. Hence his inquiry of the date of the robbery. They came to the ship at the last moment, and on the way over he became quite intimate with them and they had several games of cards together to wile away the time. He could not remember their names. They were foreign names, but he would know them again if he heard them. There was a man on from Belleville whose name he thought was Lindsay. In speaking of Belleville on ship board one day, it was clear that the two moneyed men knew more about the place and surrounding country than Lindsay.

Mr. Murray's statement, supported by the fact that two of the unsigned stolen $10 bills were put in circulation at Montreal, hangs together so well that it would seem there is something in the story worth invetigating.

PONTON HAS ISSUED A WRIT.

W. H. Ponton, through his solicitor, Mr. E. Guss Porter, has issued a writ for $50.000 against the Dominion Bank for damages incurred on account of being dismissed from the Napanee branch and for false arrest and imprisonment. The writ also includes Mr. C. Bogart, assistant manager of the Toronto branch, who personally directed the prosecution, and detectives Dougherty and Wilkes for conspiring to injure Mr. Ponton.

A NEW SET OF OFFICERS.

The Dominion Bank here has a bran new set of officers. The new manager, Mr. A. Pepler, is no stranger to the people of Napanee and is well and favorably known here. The following from The Guelph Herald explains itself:

"A change has been made in the Dominion Bank here, whereby Guelph will lose one of its most respected citizens. Mr. A. Pepler, the popular and obliging manager, received word on Wednesday of his transfer to the branch at Napanee. Mr. Pepler came here from Toronto about five years ago, and took charge of the branch. His fine business qualities and thoroughly gentlemanly disposition won him immediate popularity among the business men and citizens generally. On the retirement of ex-Ald. Calvert from the presidency of St. George's Society, Mr. Pepler was elected to fill the honorable position. He evinced a live, public spirit in all matters pertaining to the interests of the city. In St. George's congregation he has rendered valuable service as one of the churchwardens and a member of the choir. Athletics, music, and amateur theatricals

The Deseronto Flour Milling Company, of which R. Rayburn is manager, have leased the Esterbrooks flour mill at Tweed and will manufacture flour of all grades. The mills will be renovated and put in good condition forthwith.

A. C. McCauley, at one time a grain buyer in Napanee, Belleville and Trenton, has gone wrong in Chicago. He is under arrest in the Windy City for swindling and using the mails for illegal purposes. There are over 2,000 complaints against McCauley.

A troup of vagabonds with performing bears, monkers and all the other etceteras, struck town on Friday. They were given a half an hour to shake the dust of the town off their feet and their imprecations as they vanished in the direction of Piety Hill made the air blue.

Isaac Green, sr., Tyendinaga Reserve, still continues very ill and his death is daily expected. The doctor contends that the vitality of the sick man is remarkable and beyond description as he is reduced to a mere skeleton, and has abstained from food for nearly three weeks.

An interesting game of quoits was played at Newburgh last week between representatives of the Deseronto and Newburgh clubs resulting in a victory for Deseronto by twenty points. R. J. Geddis and Frank Claus were the representatives of Deseronto, and Jas. Thompson and Engineer Smith pitched for the glory of Newburgh.

Catarrh is a Disease which requires a constitutional remedy. It cannot be cured by local applications. Hood's Sarsaparilla is wonderfully successful in curing catarrh because it eradicates from the blood the scrofulous taints which cause it. Sufferers with catarrh find a cure in Hood's Sarsaparilla, even after other remedies utterly fail.

In Seymour east, says the Campbellford Herald, there is a woman who has made a pet of a black squirrel while it has yet the freedom of its home in the woods. The little creature goes regularly to the house for food, and often it makes its visit at a very early hour in the morning and sits upon the window sill till it gets its supply, and then it runs off to spend the day among the trees.

Mrs. Miles Shorey, daughter of the late John Percy, sr. passed over to her reward at her residence on Centre street on Saturday last. Deceased was 79 years of age and greatly esteemed for her many estimable qualities. The funeral took place on Monday to the old homestead at Fredericksburgh. The large crowd that followed the remains to their last resting place testified to the respect in which deceased was held.

The Napance curling and skating rink has been undergoing extensive repairs and many improvements have been made. The land has been nicely rolled, two more waiting rooms have been added and new and more commodious platforms have been erected around the outside rink for the convenience of spectators and skaters. The proprietors are sparing no pains to make this rink second to none in the district.

James Young, of Marlbank, was arrested last week by Chief Adams and Constable Huff, on a charge of assaulting John McCann, of the safe place. McCann and Young had a dispute over some work and the matter was settled by Young paying all costs in the action and agreeing to abandon the work on the road until a satisfactory settlement was arrived at by the township.

Kidney Disease Prevents Hundreds of Apparently Healthy Men From Passing a Medical Examination for Life Insurance.

If you have inquired into the matter you will be surprised at the number of your friends who find themselves healthy until they undergo the medical test, and they fail in this one point. South American Kidney Cure will remove not alone the early symptoms, but all forms of kidney disease, by dissolving the uric acid and hardening substances that find place in the system. J. D. Locke of Sherbrooke, Que., suffered for three years from a complicated case of kidney disease, and spent over $100 for treatment. He got no relief until he used South American Kidney Cure, and he says over his own signature that four bottles cured him. Sold by A.

The most probable theory is that it was accidentally set on fire, and ruffians who were returning from a disreputable house not far away and were in search of something to eat are suspected Protestant Marriages.

Archbishop Cleary, of Kingston, has issued a Pastoral, which will be read in all the Catholic congregations in the diocese, in which he forbids members of his flock from attending Protestant weddings and funerals. The mandate is couched in the following language: "Wherefore, having invoked the Almighty God, We hereby declare, with all the authority of the Church vested in Us, as Archbishop of Kingston and your Chief Pastor, that any Catholic in our Metropolitan city or diocese who shall henceforth presume to enter any non-Catholic edifice to assist at what is termed "a marriage service," or "a service for the dead," even though he should not take any active part in the performance renders himself guilty of mortal sin by dishononring the religion of his baptism, and defying the laws of Holy Church, and giving public scandal before society: and We furthermore reserve to Ourself alone the power to absolve from this heinous crime." His Grace's fulmination was occasioned by a marriage which took place in the Congregational Church, Kingston, the other day. It appears that a young lady member of the Archbishop's flock acted as bridesmaid at the wedding and Mgr. Cleary, issued a mandate in which he took occasion to say that a marriage not solemnized by a Catholic Priest is, strictly speaking, no marriage at all, but merely a civil contract not a whit more sacred than the marriage of any two heathens. His Grace also adds that a funeral service in a Protestant Church must necessarily be a mockery because Protestants do not believe in the efficacy of prayer for the dead. The language used in the pronouncement is gratuitously insulting to Protestants of all denominations, but we do not think that any great importance should be attached to it as we are firmly convinced is does not reflect the feelings of the great mass of Catholics throughout the Province, who desire to live in peace and amity with their Protestant brethren.

Rural Deanery Meeting.

The chapter of the Rural Deanery of Lennox & Addington assembled in the Guild Hall of St. M. M. Church on Thursday last, at the call of the Rural Dean. There was a general feeling of regret, that owing to the illness in his family, the Rev. A. Jarvis was unable to be present. After the reading of the minutes of former meeting and the adoption of the Secy.-Treasurer's report, the Rev. Rural Dean Forneri M.A.B.D., addressed the Chapter. In the course of his remarks he paid a well merited tribute to the ability, zeal, brotherly-kindness and helpfulness of his predecessor, the Rev. Canon Baker. He said he (Canon Baker) was ever the enthusiastic and eloquent advocate of the cause of missions and the sympathizing friend of the Missionary Clergy. The Dean regretted the removal of the Rev. F. T. Dibb from the deanery, but they had gained instead the Rev. E. T. Evans who was already making himself felt, as a power for good in his arduous mission. The special business of the meeting was in connection with the annual missionary meetings. A committee was appointed to draft a resolution of sympathy to the Rev. Canon Baker, upon his having, through ill health, to resign his position as Rural Dean and to be absent from his parish. The meeting was brought to a close by the Rural Dean pronouncing the benediction.

The following resolution was passed by the clergy of the Rural Deanery of Lennox and Addington at their recent meeting in Napance. "That we, the clergy of this Ruri decanal chapter, desire hereby to assure the Rev. Canon Baker, our late Rural Dean, of our heartfelt condolence with him in his present severe trials, in the lamentable death of his eldest son and in his own physical prostration, we would moreover express our deep sense of the loss this Deanery has sustained by his resignation of the office of Rural Dean, which he filled so long and with so much benefit to the cause of missions and the missionary clergy in the deanery. We earnestly pray for our beloved brother's restoration to his former health and for the lengthening of his days of usefulness." We also desire to tender Mrs. Baker and family our sincere sympathies in their afflictive circumstances and trust that all-sufficient strength and consolation, and a happy deliverence out of their troubles may be vouchsafed to Picton came over flushed with their victory on the preceding Saturday and determined to win the cup at all hazards. The senior game was an interesting struggle between two evenly matched teams. In the first half the game was of a brilliant character and some very pretty combination play was indulged in. During this period Napanee succeeded in scoring three goals but the Picton boys were unsuccessful in their efforts to get the ball past McCoy. Napanee's plucky little goal keeper. In the second half the match was of a more open discription and not much combination play was indulged in. In this half the visitors pushed the fighting and succeeded in scoring two goals. Fretts and Hall distinguished themselves in the back division, the work of Hall being especially worthy of mention. Hawley, Nixon and Burrows were much in evidence on the half back line, Burrows proving a regular enigma to his check. The work of Preston, Wilson, Miller, Lafferty and Deroche was particularly brilliant during the first half, but they were clearly out of condition in the last half. Several good stiff practices will prove of service to them for next Saturday's match. If a little more attention is given to combination play the collegiate boys should experience no difficulty in retaining the cup. The following composed the teams:

PICTON.		NAPANEE.
Hendrick	Goal	McCoy
Heffernon, Gilbert	Backs	Fretts, Hall
Clark, Morden, Williams	Half Backs	Hawley, Nixon, Burrows
Yerks, Clark, Harris, Ayers, Cryon	Forwards	Preston, Wilson, Miller, Lafferty, Deroche

The junior match was stubbornly contested, but the superior combination and weight of the Picton Juniors won the match. The teams lined up as follows:

NAPANEE.		PICTON.
Girven	Goal	Burlingham
Gibson, Elliott	Backs	Short, Finley
Davis, Pringle, Gaudier	Half Backs	Vandusen, Brown, Gerow
Shier, Lapum, Finkle, Russell, Mellow	Forwards	McMullen, Hooper, Thorne, Coll, Sweetman

The game resulted in a score of 3 to 2 in favor of Picton. The score at Picton stood 3 to 0 in favor of Picton, indicating the improvement that has taken place in the home team since that match.

At the request of the excursionists the Captain of the Nellie Cuthbert consented to hold the boat until six o'clock p.m. By this time darkness had set in and the steamer had to remain in the harbor until morning. Owing to the dense fog it was ten o'clock on Sunday morning before the Nellie Cuthbert steamed out of the river on the return trip. Mr. Geo. Waggott, of the Campbell House, very kindly accommodated the excursionists over night and sent them away happy by furnishing them with a hot breakfast in the morning. Mr. Waggott's inbred gallantry asserted itself as he could not be persuaded upon to accept any remuneration from the lady excursionists.

The deciding match for the cup between the senior teams of the Picton High School and the Napanee Collegiate Institute will be played off at Deseronto on Saturday. A hotly contested game may be looked forward to and as many as can find it convenient should accompany the boys.

Mr. Root, of Picton, made a very acceptable referee. Messrs. Unger and Corby acted as goal umpires, and Watson and Hayes as touch line judges.

Williams' band waggon and Anderson's band waggon will leave their respective stables on Saturday at 12:30 p.m. to witness the final foot ball match between Picton and Napanee. Fare 25c. Game starts at 2 p.m.

Mr. E. H. Baines, the retiring manager, who is being removed to Toronto, was deservedly esteemed and popular in town. As soon as it was learned that Mr. Baines was to be transferred a petition was circulated in town, and received numerous signatures, asking that he be retained here as manager. Much regret is expressed at his removal, which will be a distinct loss to the social and business life of the place.

THE CROWN ATTORNEY'S POSITION.

The Montreal Herald, acting on the assumption that the County Crown Attorney had charge of the case against W. H. Ponton, gave that official a rare old wigging. The Crown Attorney directed the following letter to the Herald setting forth his connection with the case and the communication appeared in Tuesday's issue of that journal:

(To the Editor of The Herald, Montreal, Que.)

My Dear Sir;—It is not my custom to enter a newspaper controversy in defence of any official action of mine, but an article in the editorial columns of your paper of the 20th demands not an explanation but a contradiction on my part, and a suggestion that your editor should be certain of facts before criticising so harshly a public officer.

The prosecution of Mr. Ponton was a private one, as I believe at the instance of the Dominion Bank, and was conducted by the local solicitors of the bank. I was never consulted about the matter by either the bank solicitors or the detectives either before or after the arrest, and I never met the detectives officially or otherwise until the progress of the trial. I had absolutely no conduct of the case nor was I consulted about it by either the solicitors or the detectives from start to finish. As is possible under our laws and as it is in many instances the custom, the private prosecutors had their own counsel who conducted the case without asking any assistance from me.

Now as to my official connection with the case:—Upon the day before the trial started the Police Magistrate asked me if I had anything to do with the prosecution, to which I replied that I had not. He then asked me to attend the hearing, listen carefully to the evidence produced, and be in a position to advise him upon any points concerning which he might wish my opinion. This I did. The prosecution was at the instance of a large and responsible corporation conducted by its own solicitors, and while, during the progress of the trial, it may have been felt that very trifling evidence was being pro-

We are in receipt of a communication from J. W. Edwards in answer to Mr. N. A. Asselstine's challenge in a recent issue of THE EXPRESS. As we understand it the controversy arose out of a communication which Mr. Edwards caused to be inserted in the Napanee Star. After the wordy war had progressed for some time the Star denied Mr. Asselstine the right to reply, and we published the communication in question, believing that each having had their turn, the matter would be allowed to drop. If it was a question of public interest we would be quite agreeable to allow both the gentlemen as much space as they desired, but we do not see our way clear to open our columns for the ventilation of a quarrel between two individuals that cannot prove of interest to our readers. If we did so, we fear the controversy would not end until either one, or possibly both of the contestants had been gathered to their fathers. The gentlemen should get together and settle their grievance in some other manner. In the meantime an academical essay on the amenities of school teachers would be in order.

Quinte Medical Association.

On Wednesday afternoon and evening the semi-annual meeting of the above association was held in the council chamber and was well attended by members of the profession from as far west as Frankford and as far east as Odessa, the limits of the district. After the meeting was called to order by the president, Dr. Gibson, of Belleville, Mayor Ward, in a neat speech, on behalf of the council, welcomed the Association to Napanee, and Dr. Leonard, on behalf of the profession in Napanee, cordially performed the same function. Some business matters were attended to, such as enlarging the borders of the district beyond the limits of the counties of Hastings, Prince Edward, and Lennox, so as to take in registered members of the profession from adjoining districts; fixing the place of the May meeting for Belleville provisionally; recording volunteers for popers at the next meeting and providing for the framing of a constitution and by-laws. The principal part of the time was taken up with reading and discussing papers. The papers read by Drs. Simmons and Alger, of Frankford, and Ward, of Napanee, were conspicuous by reason of the spirited discussions they provoked. At the evening session Dr. Ward exhibited a patient with ceroical tumor, and outlined history and treatment of the case. After the scientific part of the programme had been vigorously kept up till about 10 o'clock all present were invited to a complimentary supper at the Paisley House, provided by the local medicos, and the social part of the programme ran smoothly through a choice menu which proprietor Douglas had prepared in his usual excellent style. The printed menu was curiously worded but notwithstanding strange names and apt and humorous quotations the edibles were pleasantly removed by forks and spoons, and the very suitable toast list drew out eloquent speeches from nearly all present. The chairs were ably filled by Drs. Leonard and Ward, and some of the lady physicians sat with their male confreres till AULD LANG SYNE was sung at about 1.30 a.m. and the profitable and pleasant meeting was at an end.

IN THE SURROGATE COURT OF THE COUNTY OF LENNOX & ADDINGTON.

In the matter of the estate of Arnold Philip Booth, late of the Township of Ernestown, in the County of Lennox and Addington deceased.

Notice is hereby given, pursuant to R. S. O., 1887, Chapter 110 Section 36, and amending Acts, that all persons having claims against the estate of the said Arnold Philip Booth, who died on or about the 13th day of January, A. D., 1896, are required to send by post prepaid or to deliver to me on or before the 15th DAY OF NOVEMBER, 1897, their names, addresses and descriptions and a full statement of particulars of their claims and the nature of their security (if any) held by them, duly certified, and that after the said day I will proceed to distribute the assets of the deceased among the parties entitled thereto having regard only to the claims of which I shall then have notice.

THE COW.

Just a Few Hints That Will Keep the Milk Content and Generous.

Make the cows comfortable and keep them as quiet as possible. Any harsh treatment that excites or irritates the cow lessens the quantity of her milk. See that she has an abundant supply of wholesome, nutritious food and pure water to drink. Give her all she will eat up clean and keep water where she can help herself. Keep a supply of salt where she can help herself. Have her quarters clean and dry and supply plenty of bedding. She should be milked only with dry hands and only after the udders have been brushed clean. If the teats are dirty wash them off with tepid water and wipe dry with a clean cloth. Milking should be done, and the milk kept, only where the surrounding air is pure, and free from all objectionable or tainting colors. Allowing the cows to be, or the milking to be, done in a foul-smelling stable or yard, imparts to the milk an injurious taint. Keep the milk clean. Filth or dirt once dissolved in the milk can be only partly removed either by straining or running it through a separator. Aerating the milk immediately after straining aids materially in getting rid of animal flavor.

Tin vessels only should be used in handling the milk or cream. These should always be first washed out with warm water and then scalded and wiped dry. All milk should be brought directly to the dairy house and strained as soon as possible after it is drawn from the cow. If the separator is used the cream can be set away to ripen and the skim milk be used as needed. By using the separator, not only is there a saving of time and labor, but the skim milk can be used to much better advantage.

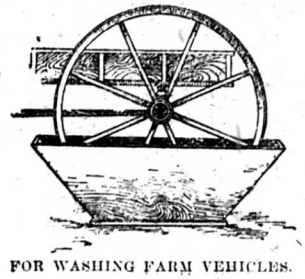
When the milk must be set away for the cream to rise, it should be set where it will cool reasonably rapidly, as the cooling of the milk sets currents in motion that bring the cream to the surface. Any disturbance of the milk after it is set away tends to break up these currents and interferes with the process. The cream should invariably be skimmed from the milk before the milk is sour. Whenever a fresh skimming of cream is added to that already in the cream vessel, the whole should be thoroughly stirred together. This is essential, in order to secure uniform ripeness. All cream should be allowed to stand at least six hours after it has been mixed with older cream, before churning. Fresh cream added to old cream and then churned immediately is largely lost.

The best churning temperatures are between 57 and 60 degrees during the summer and between 60 and 64 degrees in winter. Use the thermometer; do not rely upon guesswork.

Secure the proper conditions for the milk and cream, and it is no more work to make a uniform, good quality of butter than to make poor butter.

For Washing Farm Vehicles.

The device shown in the cut will save much time and labor in washing wagons.



FOR WASHING FARM VEHICLES.

A narrow, water-tight box on the shape shown in the illustration is slipped under the wheel when it has been "jacked" up. A pail of water is now poured in and the wheel revolved. The dirt can thus be removed quickly and much more easily than when a pail is used to hold the water. Once used, the benefits of this device will be very apparent.

The Good Side,

We may, if we choose, make the worst of one another. Everyone has his weak points; everyone has his faults. We may make the worst of these; we may fix our attention constantly upon these. But we may also make the best of one another. We may forgive, even as we hope to be forgiven. We may put ourselves in the place of others, and ask what we should wish to be done to us and thought of us were we in their place. By loving whatever is lovable in those around us, and life will become a pleasure instead of a pain; and earth will become like heaven; and we shall become not unworthy followers of Him whose name is Love.

Advantages of Keeping Late Hours.

A German doctor, who has been collecting information about the habits of long-lived persons, thus finds that the majority of those who attain old age indulged in late hours. Eight out of ten persons over 80 never went to bed till well into the small hours, and did not get up again until late in the day.—Lippincott's Magazine.

CAN'T YOU SLEEP?

Sleeplessness is one of the most frequent symptoms of heart and nerve trouble. It affects all lasses and all ages. Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills restore the nerves to healthy action and regulate the heart. Miles Boone, Fredericton, N. B., tells how they work. "I could never rest well, and often woke up with a start, and then sleep left me for the night. These pills gave me almost immediate relief, giving me healthful, refreshing sleep, and I am now strong and well."

Hold on to Your Sheep

It is folly to leave one branch of the live stock business for another, when other men are doing the same thing, so that prices are utterly demoralied. Nothing but loss can be the result of such a procedure. The time to buy is when every man wants to sell; the time to sell is when every man wants to buy. A short time ago stockmen were tumbling over one another trying to dispose of sheep, practically giving them away. Of course, any sane man could see that the outcome of such a practice must, sooner or later, make sheep paying property. So just hold on to your sheep; that is, all the best of them; the sooner the culls go the better, but, the good ones, feed up, and breed up and be ready to take the reward. Mutton sells well, even if wool is too low for profit.—Rural World.

It Keeps the Fowls From Tramping on Their Rations.

Despite all that has ever been said to the contrary, the idea still prevails in some sections that poultry can get along and even thrive if their food is presented to them in the simplest manner. This is a mistake where soft food is given, it is generally trampled upon by all the birds before it is fully eaten, and, in consequence, they are compelled to devour a more or less amount of dirt, which is usually of such a nature as to be no good to them. In order to avoid this I would suggest that a feed-box be made, having a door of slats made of laths, as shown herewith; also, on the side opposite from the door, I should have slats, as seen from the inside of the box. Place the food in this, shut the door and the fowl can reach the food from each side readily between the slats, but cannot soil it. Furthermore, a dish of water can be set within it, and the fowls can reach through and drink, but they cannot pollute it as they otherwise would. By this device stray cats and dogs have no chance of getting at the food, should it happen to be of a nature palatable to them, and stealing it away from the fowls. The semi-rotundity of the roof is to keep the fowls from roosting on it.

BINSON CO.

Capt. A. F. Holmes and J. Rudd Perry of Napanee, arrived in Tweed on Wednesday, where they were met by Mr. E. D. Stone a mining expert from the city of Chicago. Together they drove to the vicinity of Flinton, where, the Tweed News says, Mr. Holmes and his company have secured many hundred acres of the finest gold bearing property in the district. Sometime ago the News stated that Mr. Holmes was forming a company of Chicago capitalists to open and operate the properties and Mr. Stone is the expert delegate to investigate and report on the prospects.

Picton and Deseronto are saying kind things of one another these days. Picton thanks Deseronto for the active sympathy shown towards the Picton foot ball club in recent match with the N. C. I. at Deseronto. From all accounts Deseronto's sympathy was of a very active nature, indeed. Deseronto in return upholds Picton and says they won the game in a fair and sportsmanlike manner. Perhaps they did. We hope this friendly feeling will not be marred by the opening of the hockey season as it was last winter. It is well for brethren to dwell together in unity.

We are in receipt of a communication from a member of the N. C. I. team in which he complains of the unsportsmanlike conduct of the managements of the Picton High School team. The team itself, he says, is all right. The N. C. I. protested the match before the game at Deseronto had started, as Watson was not a bona fide pupil. The N. C. I. also claim that one of Picton's goals was made from an offside play. The writer accuses Picton of introducing professionalism by paying for a player's board for two weeks at a Picton hotel in order that he might be on hand to play with the team. This happened two years ago. The N. C. I. will send the cup to Picton. The writer says that the Picton management want the earth, moon, and a gold fence around both, and awards the palm for meanness and unsportsmanlike conduct. THE EXPRESS doesn't know anything of the merits of the points in dispute but the N. C. I's offer to leave the qustions to disinterested parties for adjustment seems fair enough, and we do not know what grounds Picton has for refusing such an apparently easy offer.

Mrs. McDuff—Aye, it shows more than that, yer honor. It shows that I hit him.—Boston Traveler.

What a Botanist Knows and Does Not Know About Color Change of Leaves.

"Probably not one person in a thousand knows why leaves change their color in the fall. The green matter in the tissues of a leaf is composed of two colors, red and blue. When the sap ceases to flow in the autumn the natural growth of the tree is retarded and oxidation of the tissue takes place. Under certain conditions the green of the leaf changes to red; under different aspects it takes on a yellow or brown hue. The difference in color is due to the difference in combinations of the original constituents of the green tissues and to the varying conditions of climate, exposure and soil. A dry, hot climate produces more brilliant foliage than one that is damp and cool. This is the reason that American autumns are so much more gorgeous than those of England and Scotland.

"There are several things about leaves, however, that even science cannot explain. For instance, why one of two trees growing side by side, of the same age and having the same exposure, should take on a brilliant red in the fall, and the other should turn yellow, or why one branch of a tree should be highly colored and the rest of the tree have only a yellow tint, are questions that are as impossible to answer as why one member of a family should be perfectly healthy and another sickly. Maples and oaks have the brightest colors.

"People should be careful not to touch the gorgeous red and yellow autumn plants which are not known to be harmless. Our two poisonous native plants display the most brilliant autumnal colors of any species in our woods and highways. The poisonous sumach resembles a group of young ash trees. The poisonous ivy resembles the harmless woodbine. Its leaves, however, have but three leaflets, while those of the woodbine have five."

Mr. George Wilson, for many years a prominent business man of Napanee, died at his home in Toronto on Wednesday, after an illness of five months. Deceased had resided in Toronto for the past ten years. He was over 80 years of age. Deceased was the father of Mr. W. G. Wilson, barrister, of Napanee.

The Dominion Alliance waited upon the Ontario Government and asked for two changes in the liquor license law, that a majority of the electors in a locality shall have power to prevent the renewal of an existing license in any year, and that the electors of any municipality shall have power to still further limit the hours of sale of liquor.

Deseronto has its knife in Napanee and Kingston, and last week's Tribune gloats over the N. C. I's defeat by Picton. The writer looks upon Kingston and Napanee's defeat at foot ball as a just retribution for their unfair and dishonorable conduct in the games of the district league last spring. It was altogether too mean on Napanee's part to defeat the hopes of the Deseronto foot ball team by beating them in a foot ball game.

DURING the present month three bye-elections have been held in Quebec. Two Liberals were returned by acclamation and in Drummond and Arthabasca the Liberal majority was 1,300 as compared to 465 in the general elections. The Tories might as well make it unanimous in Centre Toronto.

MR. LOUNT has resigned his seat in Centre Toronto and Geo. H. Bertram has been chosen to carry the Liberal Standard to victory. The Conservative nomination is practically going a begging. It has already been offered to half-a-dozen but they have all declined the honor.

THE Whitecaps over in Ohio are in "big business" at present. THE Toronto Telegram, an independent Conservative paper, edited by John Ross Robertson, M. The Telegram concludes by saying that "as it is, the Government, unless it kindly

THE TORONTO WORLD and the Mail & Empire are teeming these days with virulent articles anent Sir Wilfrid Laurier's visit to Washington. The Premier's motives are impugned, his loyalty questioned by fair means and foul, and by every species of misrepresentation those Tory journals are endeavoring to discredit his mission and obstruct the negotations. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir L. H. Davis are engaged in a diplomatic mission, at a foreign capital, which has to do with vexed international questions. British newspapers are refraining from any comment until the negotiations are closed and the result handed out. This course is not only wise but patriotic and is dictated by common-sense and fairness. Think of journals like the World and Mail prating about loyalty and at the same time doing all in their power to belittle the nation's representatives at Washington, hoping thereby to bring their mission into disrepute and render it abortive.

Two Pictures.

One Rich, Bright and Cheerful; the Other Gloomy, Dark and Muddy.

Forty-five samples of colored cloth are shown on the Diamond Dye sample card, from which can be produced over one hundred good, solid colors. Every dyed sample is full, rich, brilliant and fast, showing just what any woman of ordinary intelligence can do with Diamond Dyes. This is picture number one.

The common imitation dyes, and dyes composed of soap grease as a principal ingredient, show but a dozen or fifteen colors, and so imperfect in color tone and power that the small collection looks gloomy, despondent, and sickly to any individual with a taste for the beautiful. This is picture number two.

To those in doubt we say, send your address to Wells & Richardson Co., Montreal, for a color card of Diamond Dyes; it will be sent free.

The Diamond Dyes being the easiest to dye with give all the grand results in beauty and fastness of color that the heart can possibly desire.

Wasted Indignation.

The man with the florid face and the bald head grew more and more uneasy as he sat at the restaurant table. He tried to read a newspaper, but every now and then would drop it, adjust his glasses and glare up and down the room to find the waiter to whom he had given his order. At last he managed to detain him, at the risk of being scalded by the soup he carried, and inquired:

"How about that dinner I ordered?"

"It will be here immediately, sir," was the answer.

The guest tried to read his newspaper once more, but as time passed his uneasiness increased until he was glaring up and down the room as fiercely as ever. He found his waiter again and the same conversation was repeated. After two or three more similar attempts he arose and went over to another waiter, who was gracefully leaning against a pillar.

"Look here," said the guest, "I want to know something."

"Yes," responded the waiter.

"What I want to know is this: Am I ever going to get any dinner, and if I do get it, when will it be?"

The languid young man looked at him and replied:

"Excuse me. I am afraid you have made a mistake. I am only a waiter; not a prophet. Detroit Free Press.

NAPANEE, FRIDAY, NOV. 19th 1897.

THE CONSERVATIVES of Centre Toronto are finding it a case of many are chosen but few respond to the call.

WE have a strong Reform Government in Ontario, but the weakness of the Opposition renders it doubly secure.

THE less the Mail and World know of the matter the more learnedly they dilate on Laurier's mission to Washington.

WAS the hope of the single tax theory buried with Henry George? Already croakers are prophecying its early death.

MR. WHITNEY calls the Patrons "a horde of political adventurers." Here at least is one lawyer who doesn't love the farmers. He finds that he can't work them.

ANOTHER of Mr. Whitney's campaign crys has been ruthlessly torn from him. It now transpires that the Provincial Inspector of prisons did not draw on the Province for $12 for a marine glass but paid for it out of his own pocket. The Humber pig is still alive, however, and St. John is holding his own.

THE License-Holders' Association of Toronto are requesting the Government to put into their hands the enforcement of the license laws. They also want the whiskey detectives done away with. The easiest way for hotel keepers to do away with whiskey informers is to keep the law. The remedy is in their own hands.

ONE HONEST MAN.

Dear Editor.—Please inform your readers, that if written to confidentially, I will mail, in a sealed letter, particulars of a genuine, honest, home cure, by which I was permanently restored to health and manly vigor, after years of suffering from nervous debility, sexual weakness, night losses and weak shrunken parts. I was robbed and swindled by the quacks until I nearly lost faith in mankind, but thank heaven I am now well, vigorous and strong, and wish to make this certain means of cure known to all sufferers. I have nothing to sell and want no money, but being a firm believer in the universal brotherhood of man, I am desirous of helping the unfortunate to regain their health and happiness. I promise you perfect secrecy. Address with stamp, WM. T. MULFORD, Agents' Supplies, P.O. Box 59, St. Henri, Que.

assists the Opposition by some huge blunder, may owe its salvation to the Opposition's lack of ability and to the lack of sense which is characteristic of its campaign." This is strong language from a friend, but Mr. Whitney's course has demonstrated even to his friends that one of the worst misfortunes that could befall Ontario would be his advert to power.

CHARLES MATTHEWS, who was convicted of stealing cheese from the South Lake factory, was sentenced to eighteen months in the Central Prison by Magistrate Duff, of Kingston, on the 11th inst. The prisoner pleaded hard with his worship to make the sentence two years in the penitentiary instead. The preference shown by criminals for the penitentiary should lead the officials of that institution to pattern after the Central Prison. The Kingston penitentiary has been made altogether too inviting a place and criminals who have once entered within its walls do not fear a second visit. Depriving the convicts of some of the privileges which they enjoyed, such as tobacco, etc., may have a salutary effect. Rendering the penitentiary less congenial may have a tendency to prevent convicts returning to a life of crime when they regain their liberty.

THE Stratford Beacon institutes the following comparison:—"The kind of management that would be introduced into the Crown Lands Department should it, by any misfortune, fall into the hands of the Conservatives can be judged from past experience. When the Tory Government at Ottawa thought they had bluffed this province out of the disputed territory they parcelled out the timber limits therein, to the extent of 10,000 square miles, among the Charlie Rykerts and other political friends at the nominal figue of 85 per square mile. When Mr. Mowat got control of these lands for the province he put a portion of them up at public auction and realized 83,557 per square mile. The difference between 85 and 83,657 per square mile is what the people of this province gained by having an honest Liberal adminstration at Toronto. There was not a Tory journal in Ontario that at the time had a word of condemnation for the Rykert job, and they would not, it is safe to conclude, offer any objection should Whitney & Co. do the same thing if they ever got into power."

THE Dundas Banner effectually disposes of the Opposition's foolish cry that the Ontario Government has no surplus in the following trite fashion:—"Although the Mail and other papers persist in saying that there is no surplus in the Ontario treasury it is a fact that there appears in the public accounts of the Province an entry in which the Province is shown to have received in interest the sum of $360,554 during the year 1896. There cannot be interest unless there is capital. That is fact No. 1. Fact No. 2 is that in the Statistical Year Book compiled by the Dominion authorities the surplus of assets over liabilities payable on the 31st Dec., 1896, was $4,782,580. Fact No. 3 is that the Toronto Mail said the other day that the Province has at Ottawa "a capital allowance of $2,800,000 upon which we draw interest." Year after year interest on capital flows into the provincial treasury, and yet the Whitneyites are endeavoring to make out that the Province has nothing laid by, that in fact it is several millions in debt and is "standing face to face with direct taxation." It seems childish for members of the legislature to seek to mislead the people in this way. You can no more draw interest without capital than you can get eggs without hens."

THE LAST REFUGE, ETC.
Guelph Mercury.

Your pure blood Conservative campaigner is never happy unless he is impugning the loyalty of better Canadians than himself.

Liquid Fertilizers for Flowers.

Liquid fertilizers are never-failing resources and some kind or other is within the reach of all. A few drops of household ammonia in a pitcher of water are not lost on indifferent plants. A weekly application of soapsuds is recommended. Commercial plant food is good, but in some respects is not equal to barnyard manure, although cleaner and easier to handle.

Few tablesalt bags filled with various manures securely tied, a pail and an old dipper are the essentials and can be tucked away in an obscure corner of the back porch or shed, ready for hot water as the occasion demands. Pour water on the bags in the watering pot and the soluble parts will be leached out. Five or even ten-pound bags are good size for most of window gardens, keeping back two extra and fitter when those in use show signs of the watering pot.

Hen manure is of great value but must be used judiciously, for the percentage of lime in its composition is larger than that of any other given analysis. Dove manure is even better, for it contains more organic matter, nearly as much nitrogen and a third less lime, which makes it safer to use. Sheep manure has also been known to produce marvelous growth, which may be attributed to the unusual amount of organic matter it contains. Cow manure is, perhaps, safest and best of all for general use, as it contains all things in moderation.

Prove The Worth of Paine's Celery Compound.

The Public Demand for the Great Medicine Fast Increasing.

The proprietors of Paine's Celery Compound have never given to the press of the country any misleading statements, and have never exaggerated either the virtue of their wonderful remedy or the astonishing character of the testimonials it has received.

Paine's Celery Compound, the greatest and most marvellous of all blood purifiers and restorers of nerve force and power, and which has a greater public demand than all other combined remedies, has been a blessing to thousands of homes in the Dominion of Canada. These medicines that make people well receive monthly scores of letters of praise from men and women rescued from disease and death. Every month of the year hundreds are restored to new life, but many being diffident in nature, and not wishing to be recognized by the public, refrain from writing for the press.

Paine's Celery Compound being a guaranteed medicine, the public have faith in it. The cures effected for those who in the past were burdened with rheumatism, neuralgia, kidney disease, liver troubles, dyspepsia, heart troubles and blood diseases are in many cases truly wonderful. Success after the doctors fail is the great boast of the world's popular medicine, Paine's Celery Compound.

Mrs. A. Perry, Port Maitland, N.S., writes as follows:

"For two years my system was all run down, and I suffered more than I can describe from nervous prostration and insomnia. At times I almost lost my reason from severe pain at base of the brain. My husband advised me to try Paine's Celery Compound, which I did, and the effects were wonderful, I soon began to sleep well; the pain left my head; my whole system was strengthened, and I am now enjoying very good health.

"I would cheerfully recommend Paine's Celery Compound to any one suffering from like troubles. You have my best wishes for the future success of your excellent remedy."

Regained After Twenty Years' Torture From That Dread Disease, Catarrh —Hon. Geo. Taylor of Scranton, Pa., Tells the World What Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder Has Done For Him.

I was a martyr to catarrh for twenty years—tried every known remedy, but got little or no relief. Was troubled with constant dropping in the throat, terrible pains in my head, and my breath was very offensive. I was induced to give Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder a trial, and the result was magical. The first application cleared my head instantly. I persisted in its use, and to day I am a cured man, and it affords me pleasure to lend my testimony.

DWARF PEAR-HEDGE.

It Is a Source of Profit as Well as a Thing of Beauty.

There are numerous shrubs that are suitable for making hedges about one's lawn, whether one prefers evergreens or [illegible] that [illegible] in hedge [illegible] that are [illegible] beauty. The barberry is one of the latter, these bushes making a very graceful but not densely leaved growth; but the barberry's fruit is not desired in large quantities, nor is it a desirable plant to have near wheat fields, as it harbors one stage of the "rust" fungus of the wheat.

On my place I am planting hedgerows of dwarf pear trees, using winter varieties of the fruit almost exclusively. Such a hedgerow is, of course, hardly suitable for the front of one's lawn, but for side rows, and for use in the rear of one's house, the dwarf pear is quite unobjectionable. As for beauty—well, anyone who has seen a long row of these little trees in full blossom will not soon forget the sight. They are very attractive little trees, also, when in full leaf, without the bloom, as they should be kept well trimmed back to secure good fruiting, as well as a good hedge. It is surprising, too, what an amount of fruit one can thus raise upon even a small place. In my own case, I am running a pear hedge around a two-acre lot, and am now using also some cross hedges, in the rear of the buildings. It will take at least 300 trees to complete the outside row. As this will interfere very little with the planting of fruit trees over the whole interior surface of the two acres, it will be seen that on a given amount of ground one can raise much more fruit by using this outside hedgerow method. It is possible to crowd the little trees in a hedgerow, because they will be on the outside, and can thus have plenty of air and sunshine, though very close in the row; and though the row of dwarf pear trees may be quite close to the inside, larger fruit trees, the latter are not crowded by the former, since they stand up above them. This sort of work is not advisable on large commercial orchards, but on the home acre in the village lot, one wishes to make the most of every foot of ground.

Planting so many of these little pear trees, I selected winter sorts, and chose that king among pears, the Anjou, and the scarcely less inferior Lawrence. Both these pears do finely on the quince stock, and both are winter varieties. With such fruit one can store in a cool cellar and unload upon the market when the market is most in need of winter pears. With fall fruit one is very nearly at the mercy of the market, for he cannot hold the fruit for any length of time.

My own trees are set about four feet apart. In future plantings I shall increase the distance somewhat. In setting the trees be careful to get the point where the pear stock and quince root join several inches below the surface, and for the first winter, at least, give the roots a mulch for protection.—

MR. STEPHEN BELISLE GLADLY TELLS HOW HE WAS CURED.

After Other Remedies Failed to Help Him, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Made Him A Healthy Man.

From the Montreal Herald.

Down on William street the bulk of the butter and cheese trade is done and it is there that the Montreal cold storage and freezing company's mammoth building is located. In the summer time, when extensive shipments are being made, the big block is a veritable beehive. Several well known exporting firms have their warehouses in this building and one of them is Wm. T. Ware & Co. Their head warehouse man is Mr. Stephen Belisle, who, at his name indicates, is a French-Canadian and in the prime of life. If ever there was a grateful man on the face of the earth to-day that man is Stephen Belisle. After suffering indescribable agonies for several months, he is now the picture of health and feels that it is his duty to tell all the world how he was restored to health and happiness. Mr. Belisle explained his troubles, now fortunately a thing of the past, to a reporter of the Herald recently. "My work called me to all parts of the warehouse," said he, "and sometimes I went into the freezing room without my coat or cap on and then back to the warmer atmosphere. About a year ago I became very ill with a complication of diseases. I was suffering with indigestion, biliousness and the resulting nervous disorders such as sick headache and loss of appetite. I began doctoring, but I seemed to grow worse every day. I slept very little, and as time went on I was not able to do any work, and even the exertion of moving about would tire me out. I had a very poor appetite and what food I ate did not agree with me. I also suffered from a severe pain in the back and side. During that time I had tried many medicines but they gave me no relief. I had been so weak and my system was so run down that life was a burden to me. I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills which I did with extremely beneficial results. I commenced taking the pills about Christmas time and now I am feeling so good that I thought it my CORNER FEED BOX.

How the Work of Feeding Horses Can Be Simplified.

The importance of having everything as handy as possible in and about the farm buildings is not to be ignored. The work of feeding horses can often be simplified by erecting feed racks, as herewith represented in the cut, in the corner of each stall, right above the manger. Such a rack takes up little room, practically speaking, and when one is in a hurry during spring's work and the like, he can give his horses their hay ration in short meter, for the rack should be connected by means of the chute with the mow overhead.

When the grass harvest is gathered, should the barn be crowded with hay, the mouth of the chute over each stall may be covered with a board, so as to prevent hay from settling down into it when not desired. It rarely takes long for enough of the hay to be fed out so that it may be uncovered again.

Good Use for Weeds.

Summer heat, when it comes, starts a numerous and enterprising crop of weeds into active life. These may be easily controlled by the frequent use of the iron rake, which stifles them at birth. But if, through inattention, they get the start of the gardener and need to be reduced by the hoe, they should be attacked vigorously at the first chance and not allowed to perfect and drop their seed into the soil. Pull up and shake the larger ones when not so near as to endanger valuable plants thereby, and hoe up all others, not merely scraping the ground over, but raking it up and pulverizing while rooting out the weeds. These may then, while still green and succulent, be raked together and put into the compost heap, where they will be obliged to return to the gardener all that they have purloined from his soil. This compost heap may, by a little care, be made quite an important factor in the fertility of the garden. Not only all weeds, but, as crops mature, all the garden refuse not used for mulching other duty to write the proprietors of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and let them know how extremely grateful I am for the cure their medicine has effected in me. I had taken only six boxes when my condition of health was a paradise to what it had been for some months previous. HOW IT IS DONE

An Incident From Real Life That Seems to Have a True Touch.

Charles Joyce and his wife had just returned from the honeymoon, when they had their first misunderstanding, and they had just kissed and made it up, and everything was perfectly lovely, and even more than that.

"And we'll never quarrel again, will we, love?"

"No, darling, never," and he kissed her eighteen times.

"It was silly of us to quarrel when we did, wasn't it?"

"Yes, it was, and I never would have quarreled if it hadn't been for you."

"Why, dear, I didn't do it."

"No, of course, you didn't, but if it hadn't been for you it never would have happened."

"I don't think I was to blame."

"I'm sure I wasn't."

"But, you know, dear, I couldn't have done it all by myself. Somebody must have been to blame."

"Well, I wasn't the one, I'm sure."

"And I'm just as sure I wasn't."

"That's a matter of opinion."

"Of course, and my opinion is my own."

"Well, who said it wasn't?"

"There you are again. You can't talk two minutes without letting your temper get away with you."

"My temper isn't any worse than yours."

"Who said it was? I wasn't saying anything about my temper, was I?"

"But you were about mine, and I don't propose to listen to it. If I can't live in peace here, I can go to an hotel and be quiet, anyhow."

"Well, go to the hotel. It's a more fitting place for you than a decent home."

"This is a fine home, isn't it. Good night. I'm off."

"You are a tyrant; that's what you are."

"Well, you need that sort."

"Boo-hoo boo-hoo! I'm going home to mother."

And then they made it up again.—Tit Bits.

FROM PERSONAL EXPERIENCE.

Many have tried for years to discover a remedy suitable to their own case for the Constipation, Biliousness, Indigestion, Headache, Kidney and Liver Complaints arising from Poor Digestion, Weak Stomach, and Disordered Liver.

To these we say: Try the new medicine—

Laxa-Liver PILLS

Read what people say. Here it is.

Miss S. Lawson, Moncton, N. B., says: "They cured me of constipation and sick headache."

Mr. H. James, St. Nicholas Hotel, Hamilton, Ont., says: "They are a pleasant, sure and quick cure for constipation, dyspepsia and sick headache."

Miss M. E. Hicks, South Bay, Ont.: "Laxa-Liver Pills are excellent for sick-headache, causing no pain or griping."

Mrs. John Tomlinson, Hamilton, Ont.: "They are a perfect cure for even the plants, may be put into it, wet thoroughly and covered with a little earth and thus rotted down and retained for years so much homemade fertilizer. It should be established in some out-of-the-way corner; a hole dug a few feet deep to accommodate it will be found convenient and the contents drenched with hose from time to time to promote decomposition, after which a few shovelfuls of earth will delay evaporation and help retain the gases. When used the addition of wood ashes and bone dust, of course, makes it by so much the richer.—Boston Transcript.

Live Stock Pointers.

The fall pig should be kept by itself during the winter, fed well and kept warm.

If food for stock is cooked at all, it should be cooked and not simply warmed.

If your hog is sick, a vermifuge, such as worm seed, will very likely reach the case.

If you have a halter puller, arrange the halter so that it will choke. That will cure.

The safest plan is to get rid of cattle that have swelling on the jaw. It may be lumpy jaw.

[illegible] will kill [illegible] in centre of pen & [illegible] when cattle are [illegible]

Two litters of pigs a year, is the wonder of the swine business, is the position a noted breeder takes.

The farmer should manufacture meat, butter, cheese and eggs out of his grain. That is profitable farming.

My hogs that die with cholera were nearly fat enough for the pork barrel, says a breeder. Fat all their lives, we suppose, that is in a diseased condition from the beginning.

When a horse begins to cough, run at the nose and have sores on him, it is probably farcy, and should be separated from the well horses. Wash sores with a three per cent. solution of carbolic acid, feed generously—but not on fat forming foods—and give a strong blood purifier.

Durable Hog Trough.

I send a drawing of a hog-trough which I find to be the best I have ever used. The wire is not in the way of throwing in the feed, as is the case where strips are nailed across the trough. The wire prevents the hogs from getting in the trough and keeps the trough from spreading. Use one piece two by six, and one two by eight inches, nailed together, with ends nailed on the usual way. Take No. 9 or 2 wire and begin four inches from the end, one side, and staple securely; then draw the wire across angling to eight inches from the head of the trough on the other side, and so on. This gives each hog a space of eight inches.—D. H. West, in Farm and Fireside.

Hard on Yankee Farmers.

Do men learn by experience? Zimmer, the great German historian says they do not. Any man who has watched the course of the farmers of the United States for the past twenty years will readily see they do not. Last spring it was wet and backward and we urged several of the dairymen in this vicinity to put in a crop of peas and oats, late sown, as a soiling crop, against the usual drought the latter part of August and September. They had been "burned up," as the saying goes, several times, had lost hundreds of dollars, each one of them, in milk shrinkage in past seasons. The cost in money and labor of putting in the peas and oats was trifling. This was their excuse for not doing this wise thing:

"We are going to have a wet season. Pasture will be plentiful. We will not need the soiling crop."

They had needed it sorely for several seasons. They had no reason to think they could tell what this season was going to be. But in face of their experience, as to previous seasons, in face of the great loss that had burned holes in their pockets, in face of the advantage a good soiling would be to them, they put it all aside for a mere supposition, a guess that it was going to be a wet [illegible] their cattle [illegible] of the milk is [illegible] extent that they cannot be brought back. There is a good deal in this idea. But do men learn from experience?—Hoard's Dairyman.

HEADS THAT ACHE.

Heads that ache can be made bright, clear and free from pain by using Burdock Blood Bitters, the true natural cure for headache from whatever cause arising. "Headache and pain in the back afflicted me for a long time; but now I am free from them, thanks to the use of one bottle and a half of B. B. B." Miss J.

Wheeling and the Hearing.

An eminent Italian physician, curious to observe the effect of fatigue on cyclists, recently examined twenty-four men who had ridden thirty-two miles in two hours and a quarter, and found that, with reference to the hearing, in nearly every instance it was defective, though it became normal again after two or three hours' rest.

Vast Output of Wine.

The vintage of California this year promises to reach 20,000,000 gallons, or 25 per cent. more than last season. About one-half of the grape crop has already been converted into wine. The growers are now receiving an advance of from $5 to $10 a ton for their grapes.

A Vegetarian Argument.

It is estimated that twenty-two acres of land is necessary to sustain one man on fresh meat. The same space of land if devoted to wheat culture would feed forty-two people; if to oats, eighty-eight; potatoes, Indian corn and rice, 176; and if to the plantain or bread-fruit tree, over 6000 people.

The Size of an Atlantic Fog.

The captain of a big Atlantic liner, after many calculations, has come to the conclusion that the general size of a fog in the Atlantic is about 30 miles in diameter.

Dairy Cow Rations.

At an Iowa institute one farmer stated that the following was his idea ration for a creamery cow: Corn fodder, 16 pounds, ensilage 40 pounds, bran 6 pounds, corn meal 5 pounds, oil meal 2 pounds, hay 8 pounds. Condensing factories will not accept milk from cows which have been fed ensilage or brewers' grains. Another speaker stated that the separator and ensilage had increased his butter product 65 pounds per cow during the year, while still another said that his separator had added $12.50 per cow to his product and that he can raise the best calves from separator milk.

Feed the Pigs Often.

Many a man would be surprised if he knew how many times a sow nurses her pigs during a day. There are two reasons for this: First, the sow is not able to retain her milk a long time; second, a pig has a small stomach and cannot store away a great quantity of food at one time. There is a natural lesson in this: In order to have pigs do well at an early age feed little but often, four times is better than three a day, especially if it is a sloppy or milk food.

CHAPTER VI.

St. Mary's clock was chiming half-past seven when Ephraim Judd, suddenly turning the corner of a street on his way to the bank, all but ran against Peggy Lown. She was the very woman he was coming thus early to see. He wanted her to get the office floor washed before John Brancker should arrive; but the sight of her white, scared face sent a sudden thrill of terror to his heart. Was anything suspected? Had anything been discovered? were his mental queries, thinking of himself alone.

"Oh, Mr. Judd, thank heaven I've met you!" cried Peggy, with a great gasp. "Run to the bank, sir. There's been murder—murder! Poor Mr. Hazeldine ——" But here Peggy caught sight of a policeman at the top of the street, and hurried off without a word more.

Mr. Hazeldine murdered! Ephraim Judd caught hold of a garden railing to keep himself from falling. For a moment or two the street and its houses faded away, and he was looking through the fanlight again, as on the previous night. A boy stopped and stared curiously at him; then Ephraim's wits came back. A few rapid strides brought him to the bank. One of the heavy doors was open, left so by Peggy Lown. Ephraim passed through, and made at once for Mr. Hazeldine's room. He took in the scene at a glance. Mrs. Sweet had had some water thrown over her, and showed signs of returning consciousness; Sweet himself, only partially dressed, was kneeling on one knee a foot or two away from the murdered man. He had tried to lift up the body, but had been compelled to let it drop again, and now he was staring at it as though he could not believe the evidence of his senses. A short distance away lay the knife—no one would touch that till the police arrived. And then Ephraim saw something else which Sweet in his perturbation had failed to notice; the iron door which opened into the strong room was partially open. Had there been robbery as well as murder?

Mr. Hazeldine was lying on his face, with one arm under his head, and the other outstretched, the hand of the latter being clenched as if in a spasm of mortal agony. Mr. Judd stooped and took hold of the hand; it was as cold as marble and apparently as senseless. No life was there.

"Oh, Mr. Judd, sir, what a sight is this!" cried Obed, while the tears streamed down his pudgy cheeks.

Mr. Judd did not answer. He heard the policeman's heavy footfall, and next moment that functionary came in, accompanied by Peggy, and followed at a respectful distance by a crowd of some half-dozen people from the street, who felt sure that it must be a case of burglary at the least, and that, by good luck, there might perhaps be murder as well.

Mrs. Sweet was sitting up by this time, and staring round in a dazed sort of way. The sight of the constable roused her. She put her hands to her head and felt at her drenched cap and hair. "What a sight I must look! I wish I had my other cap on," was the first thought in her mind. Then she whipped off her apron and hid her saturated head-dress with it. It was the touch of comedy which is seldom absent from even the grimmest of human tragedies. The constable advanced without a word, and turned the body of the dead man over on its back. Mr. Hazeldine's vest was unbuttoned, the ends of his cravat were hanging loose, and his collar had apparently been torn by violence from the stud which had held it. His shirt-front had been cut by some sharp instrument just above the region of the heart, a small red patch marking the place.

"He's dead enough, poor gentleman," said he, with a shake of his head, as he let his fingers rest for a moment on Mr. Hazeldine's wrist. "But we shall have the doctor here in a minute or two."

Then he picked up the knife and examined it curiously. The eyes of all present followed his movements. Sweet, who had been staring at the knife, shuddered as he saw it.

"Do you know whose knife that is?" asked Mr. Mace, who had come in with the constable.

"No, I don't," answered Sweet, shortly, and very red in the face.

"I thought as much," said Mr. Mace, dryly. "In these cases the person one would naturally expect to know the most is nearly sure to know the least. But, don't be afraid, my good man; you will have an opportunity of telling all you know before long. Meanwhile, the less you say the better, except when you are asked a question by those who have a right to know."

Mr. Mace mounted a chair and examined the iron bars which protected the two windows of the office. There was nothing the matter with them. Evidently no entrance had been effected that way.

"And now you and I will take a little walk round the premises," said Mr. Mace to Obed; so away they went, the latter ungraciously enough, although he was in a dreadful state of puzzle as to how anyone could possibly have made his way into the bank overnight, and left it again without his knowledge.

The front door was first of all examined, and afterwards the back door, which opened into a small paved yard, shut in by a high wall protected by revolving iron spikes. There was nothing about either of them to show that they had been tampered with in any way. The two men went next into the general office, where everything seemed in its usual state, and from that they passed into the inner office. Here Mr. Mace's sharp eyes seemed drawn as if by instinct to the blood-stains on the floor.

"Ha! What are these? Who has been here?" he said.

"God bless my heart! I know no more about 'em than you do, sir!" cried Sweet, beginning once more to quake like a jelly.

"These are the marks of blood," said Mr. Mace, gravely. "And here are finger-marks of a similar kind outside this drawer."

"Why, that is one of Mr. Brancker's drawers," said Sweet.

"One of Mr. Brancker's drawers, hey? Does that gentleman keep any money in it, do you know?"

"Oh, no, sir; that's not one of the cash drawers; and, besides, the money's all put away in the strong room at night."

Mr. Mace made a careful examination of the rest of the office, but discovered nothing further out of the ordinary way. He then locked the two doors that opened into the office, and put the keys in his pocket. He and Sweet were just crossing the corridor when John Brancker, pale and breathless, appeared at the door.

In speaking thus of Mr. Brancker, Ephraim had no ulterior motive, nor did it strike him at the time that his words might be the means of placing John in a very awkward position.

Two more constables had arrived by now. Mr. Mace planted one of them at the door of the strong room.

"Don't let anyone enter here without my permission," he said. The other man he sent in search of Mr. Brancker, while Mr. Judd left the bank at the same time to break the news to Clement Hazeldine. At the doctor's wish Mrs. Sweet and Peggy had retired. They would be required later on, but at present they were only in the way.

"There seems to have been robbery here as well as murder," said Mr. Mace to Sweet. "I suppose you have no idea how it has all come about?"

Sweet had recovered his faculties in some measure by this time. Sorry though he was for Mr. Hazeldine, he yet felt that he himself must of necessity be a personage of some note for a considerable time to come. Now that he partly recovered from his first fright, he was beginning to swell with a sense of self-importance, and he proceeded to put on his most official air, and began to enter into a long, rambling statement which might have lasted for half an hour had he not been sharply pulled up.

"Tut-tut, man can't you answer a plain question in a few plain words?" said Mr. Mace, impatiently. "Do you, or do you not, know anything of this affair?"

"No, I don't," answered Sweet, shortly, and very red in the face.

"I thought as much," said Mr. Mace, dryly. "In these cases the person one would naturally expect to know the most is nearly sure to know the least. But, don't be afraid, my good man; you will have an opportunity of telling all you know before long. Meanwhile, the less you say the better, except when you are asked a question by those who have a right to know."

Mr. Mace mounted a chair and examined the iron bars which protected the two windows of the office. There was nothing the matter with them. Evidently no entrance had been effected that way.

"And now you and I will take a little walk round the premises," said Mr. Mace to Obed; so away they went, the latter ungraciously enough, although he was in a dreadful state of puzzle as to how anyone could possibly have made his way into the bank overnight, and left it again without his knowledge.

The front door was first of all examined, and afterwards the back door, which opened into a small paved yard, shut in by a high wall protected by revolving iron spikes. There was nothing about either of them to show that they had been tampered with in any way. The two men went next into the general office, where everything seemed in its usual state, and from that they passed into the inner office. Here Mr. Mace's sharp eyes seemed drawn as if by instinct to the blood-stains on the floor.

"Ha! What are these? Who has been here?" he said.

"God bless my heart! I know no more about 'em than you do, sir!" cried Sweet, beginning once more to quake like a jelly.

"These are the marks of blood," said Mr. Mace, gravely. "And here are finger-marks of a similar kind outside this drawer."

"Why, that is one of Mr. Brancker's drawers," said Sweet.

"One of Mr. Brancker's drawers, hey? Does that gentleman keep any money in it, do you know?"

"Oh, no, sir; that's not one of the cash drawers; and, besides, the money's all put away in the strong room at night."

Mr. Mace made a careful examination of the rest of the office, but discovered nothing further out of the ordinary way. He then locked the two doors that opened into the office, and put the keys in his pocket. He and Sweet were just crossing the corridor when John Brancker, pale and breathless, appeared at the door.

"And you neither saw nor heard anything last night out of the ordinary way—nothing, in fact, to make you suspicious that anything was wrong?"

"Nothing whatever. I was as comfortable in my mind when I turned into bed between six and seven this morning as ever I was in my life."

"The inference would seem to be that the crime was committed between the hours of half-past ten and half-past eleven," said Mace. "But that is a point which will have to be inquired into more minutely later on." Then turning to John, he added, "You, Mr. Brancker, will probably be able to tell us whether there has been robbery here as well as murder," and beckoning him to follow, he led the way into the strong room.

CHAPTER VII.

"Yes, there has certainly been foul play here as well as in the other room," said John Brancker, after a brief examination of the strong room. "In the first place, the twelve hundred pounds are gone which Mr. Hazeldine fetched from London yesterday, and I have no doubt that there were cash and notes to the amount of three or four thousands pounds in the safe, which also seem to be missing. The exact sum I cannot, of course, tell till I have examined the books. Of this safe, Mr. Hazeldine himself always kept the key. The other safes in the cellar are under my charge. I must at once send a telegram to Mr. Avison, who is staying for a few days in Paris on his way home."

"That's an ugly bruise, Mr. Brancker, just above your left eye," said the chief constable, gazing straight into the other's face.

"Yes; it is the result of a little accident last night, answered John indifferently. "A woman flung a stone at me. I suppose I shall be disfigured for a few days; but it might have been worse."

"If you will step this way for a moment, there is something I should like to ask you about," said Mace, and with that he led the way to the inner office, Dr. Barton and Sweet bringing up the rear. Mace unlocked the door and they all went in. "Can you explain how those marks came there?" asked the constable, pointing to the stains on the floor.

"Good gracious, no!" cried John with a start. "I know no more about them than you do"—which was precisely the remark Sweet had given utterance to. "And there are more marks outside my drawer! What can it all mean?"

"It may, perhaps, be as well to open the drawer, if you have the key about you."

present moved as with the weight from the dead man to the weapon that had slain him. Fresh footsteps were heard outside, the crowd at the door divided for a moment, and in came Mr. Chief Constable Mace attended by one of his men and Dr. Barton.

The idlers were driven out, and the front door was shut and bolted. The news had spread, and already some half-hundred people had assembled outside the bank. Those inside were waiting for the first words of Dr. Barton. Not long had they to wait.

"He has been dead for several hours, probably since midnight, or even earlier," was the verdict. Then he asked that a table might be brought in from some other room, and the body be laid upon it.

The knife was in Mr. Mace's possession by this time. He showed it to the doctor.

"Yes, it looks like it, but we shall know better before long," said the latter. He was taking off his coat and rolling up his shirt-sleeves. Sweet, who was trembling like a jelly, had gone with one of the constables to fetch a cab.

"It seems to me as if there has been [illegible] robbery," said [illegible] to the chief constable, [illegible] to the strong room door.

Mr. Mace nodded.

"You know the premises, Mr. Judd," he said. "Suppose you and I have a look."

The strong room was in darkness except for a sickly gleam of daylight which penetrated through the small grated opening in the outer wall, but Ephraim struck a match and lighted the gas. The door of one of the three iron safes, the one in which bullion was always kept, was wide open. Apparently the safe had been rifled. Strewn about the floor were a number of documents, large or four empty cash-bags, and some books. There, too, open and empty, lay the black leather bag which had contained the twelve hundred pounds brought by Mr. Hazeldine from London the previous afternoon.

"Its looks as if somebody had been here that had no right to," said Mr. Mace.

"It does, indeed," assented Ephraim. "I think we ought to have Mr. Brancker here as soon as possible."

"Right you are; and there's the poor gentleman's relations to be told. Who's to do that?"

"I will go and break the news to Mr. Clement—that's the doctor—if you like, and then he can tell the others."

"Do so, please; and could you not call on Mr. Brancker at the same time?"

"He lives in an opposite direction. One of your men might fetch him in ten minutes. By-the-bye, I shouldn't be a bit surprised if Mr. B. was the last person who saw the Governor alive."

"Ah; in that case the sooner we have him here the better. But what reason have you for saying so?"

"Why, I met him about half-past ten last night on his way to the bank. He said that he was coming to fetch his umbrella, but he may have seen Mr. H. at the same time."

"Um! Well, we shall hear what he has to say when he arrives."

"No doubt Sweet can tell you more of the matter than I can."

Good Blood

Is essential to health. Every nook and corner of the system is reached by the blood, and on its quality the condition of every organ depends. Good blood means strong nerves, good digestion, robust health. Impure blood means scrofula, dyspepsia, rheumatism, catarrh or other diseases. The surest way to have good blood is to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. This medicine purifies, vitalizes, and enriches the blood, and sends the elements of health and strength to every nerve, organ and tissue. It creates a good appetite, gives refreshing sleep and cures that tired feeling. Remember,

"This terrible tale, that I have just heard, cannot be true, Mr. Mace," he said.

"Only too true. I am sorry to say, Mr. Brancker. Come and see for yourself," answered the chief constable, and led the way into Mr. Hazeldine's office.

The body had been covered with a sheet and Doctor Barton was in the act of putting on his overcoat. He shook hands with Mr. Brancker, whom he had known for years. John's glance travelled from the table with its terrible burden to the doctor's face, and then tears rushed to his eyes. It seemed all like a hideous dream.

"We can do no more at present," said the doctor to Mr. Mace. "There will have to be a 'post-mortem,' of course; but that, I apprehend, will merely serve to verify what we know pretty well already. The tissue of the heart has doubtless been punctured by some sharp instrument—probably by the knife in your possession—and death must have been almost instantaneous."

"But who can have done it?" asked John, in a stupor of horror and grief. He lifted a corner of the sheet and gazed [illegible] face, [illegible] an awful [illegible] the [illegible] gave [illegible] the impression of [illegible] back by main force some grim secret, untold in life and now frozen into silence for ever.

"That's just what we would all like to know," answered Mr. Mace, dryly.

"There was a light in his office when I called for my umbrella about half-past ten," said John.

"But did you see Mr. Hazeldine, and speak to him at that time?" asked Mace.

"No, I never saw him at all yesterday evening. He did not get back from London till late, and I would not disturb him."

"Then it must have been you, sir, that I heard going out about that time," said Sweet.

"Most probably. I let myself in with my pass-key, found my umbrella in the dark, and was out of the bank again in three minutes."

"And I came upstairs when I heard the door bang, thinking it was Mr. Hazeldine who had gone," said Sweet. "I was quite dumfounded when I opened the office-door and saw him sitting there in his chair. 'I shall not be done for about half an hour yet,' says he. 'I will let myself out when I'm ready. You needn't trouble any more, Sweet.' So with that I went, leaving him sitting there. Little did I think—"

"Never mind what you thought, tell us what happened next," said Mr. Mace.

"What happened next was that I went downstairs and got my supper," responded Sweet, with a resentful glance at the chief constable. "After that I sat and had a pipe, waiting to hear Mr. Hazeldine go, that I might lock up for the night."

Sweet paused and rubbed his nose with his forefinger.

"But you never heard him go, hey?" queried Mace.

"No, I never heard him go. I waited till half-past eleven, and then I went upstairs again."

"Perhaps you had a little snooze meanwhile," said Mace, insinuatingly.

"Me go to sleep when I'm on dooty!" exclaimed Sweet, with an indignant sniff. "No, sir, I'm not one of that sort, and nobody ever hinted at such a thing before."

"I am glad to hear it. But tell us what happened when you came upstairs for the second time."

"Not caring to disturb Mr. Hazeldine again if he was still there, I peeped through the keyhole to see whether there was a light, but I couldn't see one. Still, to make sure, I knocked, but there was no answer, so I opened the door and looked in. Everything was in darkness; the gas was out and the fire was out. Says I to myself, 'He's gone;' and with that I locked the door on the outside, feeling sure that everything was right."

"But ought not the fact of your not having heard Mr. Hazeldine leave the premises have caused you to suspect that something was wrong?"

"Mr. Hazeldine was a very quiet gentleman. He would shut the front door and make hardly any noise about it. Mr. Brancker here, begging his pardon for saying so, generally bangs the door after him."

"What did you do when you found, as you thought, that Mr. Hazeldine was gone?"

"I did what I always do—I put out the gas in the lobby and fastened up the front door for the night, and then went the rest of my rounds to see that everything was all right."

"How often in the course of the night are you supposed to go your rounds?"

"Once every hour; and I'm not only

John produced his bunch of keys at once. "This is the one," he said, handling the bunch to Mace. "Perhaps you had better open the drawer yourself."

The constable took the key and opened the drawer. The books and papers were marked here and there with drops of blood. John stared as he had never stared before. "Someone has been here to a certainty," he said. The books and papers have been disturbed, and as for those stains—" He was too agitated to say more.

"And yet the lock does not seem to have been tampered with," said Mace, with his keen eyes again fixed on John's face.

"It's all a mystery, and I can throw no light on it whatever," answered the latter.

"Can you call to mind the last occasion of your having to open the drawer?"

"It was when I put my papers away last evening before leaving; that would be sometime between eight and nine o'clock."

"Then you did not open the drawer when you came back to the bank at half-past ten?"

"Certainly not. I had no occasion to do so. I did not even light the gas, but groped for and found my umbrella in the dark. I was not more than two minutes in the office."

"I shall have to keep this office locked up till the jury have visited it," said Mace. "I have no doubt the coroner will be able to sit this afternoon."

John looked at him for a moment, as though he hardly understood his meaning; then, following Mace's lead, they all left the office, the door of which was carefully relocked. They had just got back to the other office when Clement Hazeldine rushed in, white and breathless.

Although lame, Ephraim Judd, with the assistance of his stick, could get over the ground as quickly as most people, and it did not take him many minutes to reach Clement Hazeldine's door. Clem lodged with the widow of the practitioner to whose business he had succeeded. He was still in bed when Ephraim knocked, having been attending a patient till four a.m.; but the summons sent upstairs was so peremptory that he lost no time in coming down. In what words Ephraim told his terrible tidings he never afterwards knew; it is sufficient that they were told.

"What about your brother?" asked Ephraim, as soon as Clement seemed in some measure to be recovering from the shock. "Ought he not to know as soon as possible?"

"Will you please go and tell him, Mr. Judd, while I go down to the bank? There's my mother and sister, too; but Edward must break the news to them. It seems impossible that it can be true—impossible to think that I shall never see my poor father alive again! What wretch's hand has done this deed?"

Beecham, the suburb of Ashdown, where Edward Hazeldine lived, was a clear mile and a half away. Ephraim would have hired a fly, but there was none to be had at that early hour. He was far from being easy in his mind as he walked along. It was almost a certainty that during his absence Mr. Mace would discover the blood-stains on the office floor, and Ephraim felt terribly afraid lest, by some means or other they should be traced back to him. He did not well see how they could be, but his conscience made a coward of him. He had taken away the knife that had cut his hand, and it was now locked in his trunk at home, while the cut itself, although it had bled a good deal at the time, had not proved a severe one. It was in the palm of the hand, and he had covered it with a little gold-beater's skin to keep the air out. He made a mental note that on no account must Mr. Mace's eyes be permitted to discover the wound.

Edward Hazeldine was an early riser. While breakfasting, he made a point of running through his correspondence. It was a saving of valuable time. He had just sat down to the table with his heap of letters before him, when Mr. Judd was announced. Edward, who knew that Ephraim was employed at the bank, leaped in a moment to the conclusion that his visitor could only be the bearer of ill news, and one glance at the latter's grave face was enough to assure him that such was the case.

"My father—what is amiss?" he said, as he started to his feet.

Then Ephraim had to break the same news to him that he had already broken to his brother. Edward's face blanched and his eyes filled with horror as the tale was told.

"My father murdered!—he who never harmed a creature in his life."

Then he bowed his head on his hands, and there was silence in the room for a little while.

But Edward Hazeldine was a man of time was for him next to an impossibility. Presently he lifted his head, wiped his eyes, and rang the bell. To the servant who came in, he said:

"Order the mare to be put in the dog-cart and brought round as soon as possible." Then to Ephraim: "I will drive over to the bank to go as soon as I have given certain instructions to my clerk."

Left alone for a few minutes, Ephraim glanced with curiosity round the handsomely furnished room. He had never been inside Edward Hazeldine's house before. Then his eyes wandered to the breakfast tray, and the little heap of post-letters lying beside it. As has been said already, other people's letters always had an irresistible fascination for Mr. Judd. If he could not see the inside of a letter, he would rather see the outside than not see it at all. His long, thin fingers shot out and opened automatically. He half rose from his chair, and one hand went out toward the table. His big ears were on the alert for the slightest sound. Another moment and the letters were in his hands.

He ran them quickly through, noting the post-mark of each, and the hand-writing of the addresses. Evidently they were chiefly business communications. But over one of them he paused, looking at it this way and that some half-dozen times.

"I could almost swear that this was the poor Governor's hand, only disguised a bit," he muttered. "Posted in London yesterday, too! That 'C' is certainly his, and so is that 'h.' It's his writing, I would wager anything. Now, what could he possibly have to write Mr. Edward about yesterday that he could not tell him to-day? I would give something to know what's inside.

But at this juncture he heard Edward Hazeldine's firm, heavy tread outside. The letters were replaced on the table, and three minutes later the two men were on their way to the bank.

Edward Hazeldine got back home about two o'clock. Never would he be able to forget what he had gone through that forenoon. On him, as the elder son, had devolved the duty of breaking the tragic news to his mother and sister. Mrs. Hazeldine had fainted and Fanny had gone into hysterics. The scene had tried him almost beyond endurance.

The jury had been summoned for three o'clock that afternoon. As Edward could be of no further service at present he had made his escape. He fervently hoped that the coroner would not think it needful to call him as a witness. Everything at present was conjecture and vague surmise. So far, the police seemed to be without any clue to the perpetrator of the crime.

Edward had not been home more than a few minutes when Lord Elstree was announced.

His lordship was one of two sleeping partners in the brewery, having about ten thousand pounds invested in the concern. He was on excellent terms with Edward, of whose business abilities he had a very high opinion. His home for three parts of the year was at Seaham Lodge, a splendid property some four or five miles from Beecham. His family were all grown up; the daughters married and the sons out in the world; but with himself and his wife, as companion to her ladyship, there world; but with himself and his wife, lived a distant kinswoman, Miss Winterton by name, whom Edward Hazeldine had secretly made up his mind to win for his wife, if it were anyhow possible for him to do so. Miss Winterton was thirty years old, and plain looking, but accomplished and amiable; and had, moreover, a fortune of fifteen thousand pounds in her own right. Edward, who had frequent occasion to visit the lodge, on matters of business, and who was generally asked to stay for luncheon or dinner, as the case might be, had as yet ventured to whisper no word of love in Miss Winterton's ear; but there may have been that in his looks and manner which afforded her some inkling of the state of affairs. If such were the case, her treatment of Edward was not of a kind to lead him to fear that when the time should have come for him to urge his suit, he would be very hardly treated. He told himself that he would wait till after Christmas; till the year's balance at the brewery should have been struck. Business was going up by "leaps and bounds," and he wanted to secure not merely Miss Winterton's approval of his suit, but the Earl's as well, and he knew that nothing would put the latter into such a good humor as the assurance of a thumping dividend on his investment in the brewery.

...came hurriedly into the room and held out his hand to the other. "Surely, surely there can be no truth in it?"

He was a short, podgy, sand-haired man, with a fresh complexion and a tip-tilted nose, and looked far more like a retired tradesman than a "belted Earl." In one respect, indeed he would have made a first-rate tradesman; in him the commercial instinct was very strongly developed, and half his time was given to the consideration of schemes by means of which his large income might be made larger still.

"My father was murdered last night, if that is the rumor to which your lordship refers," answered Edward, with a little break in his voice.

The Earl sat down and stared at the other for a full half minute without speaking. Then he said, "If not too painful to you, I should like you to tell me such particulars of the affair as are already known."

This Edward proceeded to do as briefly as possible:

"It is terrible—terrible!" ejaculated the Earl. I need scarcely say, my dear Hazeldine, that you have my most unfeigned sympathy—both you and your mother—in this dreadful affliction. How little we know what a ...sulted gave me to understand that, with great care, I might live for some time to come, but that there was a possibility of my being taken off at any moment. Rest and perfect quiet were essential to my case, and a complete release from the cares and worries of business—all of which you will say might have been mine had I so willed it—and indeed it is quite true that I might have retired to some restful spot, and there, 'far from the madding crowd,' have eked out the poor remainder of my days, but for certain circumstances which rendered such a step an impossibility. What those circumstances were, I will now tell you.

"Edward, from youth upward I have been a gambler—a secret gambler—but so well have I kept the knowledge to myself that not even your mother has known of it, whatever she may have suspected. When I was a schoolboy I used to gamble for halfpence. When I grew older I was in the habit of venturing my half-crowns, and afterwards my sovereigns, on this race or the other. When I was a young man, and supposed to be taking my autumn holidays in Scotland or at the seaside, I generally contrived to find my way to Doncaster for ...In carrying out this desperate resolve I am merely anticipating the end of a life which no power on earth could prolong for many months, and which might go out like the snuff of a candle at any moment. The proceeds of my policy of insurance will be saved to my family, my fair fame will remain untainted, the world will respect my memory as that of a man just and honorable in all his dealings, while those I leave behind me will have no cause to blush for the name they bear.

"Such being the case, why have I chosen to make you my confidant in this matter? Why have I imposed upon you the burthen of such a confession? Why have I not let you live on in ignorance, as your brother will live on in his? I will tell you why.

"Notwithstanding all the precautions I shall take to obviate so untoward a result, it is just possible that my death may be laid at the door of some innocent person. Many a guiltless man has been done to death by circumstantial evidence, and such a thing might easily happen again. I charge you, therefore, as my eldest son, that in the event of anyone being accused of my death, you at once make public such facts as will suffice to free him from so heinous a charge. Better, a thousand times better, that the whole truth should be told, than that the accusation of being a murderer should cling to anyone for an hour! I lay upon you this most solemn duty, being perfectly satisfied that I could entrust it into no better hands. My fervent hope, however, is that no such contingency may arise. Should it do so, your duty will be plainly before you, and I feel satisfied that you will not shrink from doing it.

"And now, what shall I say more? I dare not write one-twentieth part of that which I feel, for fear I should break down; and I need all the strength I can summon to my aid to go through the ordeal before me. You will continue to be what you have always been—a good son and a good brother. You will treat your father's memory in your thoughts as leniently as you can. I have been weak, foolish—criminal even; but had fortune smiled on my schemes, all this would have remained unknown, even to you. I should have lived and died prosperous and respected, and the local newspaper, in its obituary notice, would have attributed to me half the virtues under the sun. But should the world ever come to know that which I have here revealed to you, then the colors it would paint me in would be black indeed.

"I can write no more.

"Farewell, a long farewell.

"Your unhappy father,

"JAMES HAZELDINE."

Edward Hazeldine was still sitting with his father's open letter in his hand, in a maze of grief, shame and perplexity, when there came a knock at his office door. He put the letter carefully out of sight, and then said, 'Come in." A servant entered.

"If you please, sir, the coroner has sent for you, and you are wanted immediately."

The coroner and jury had met in a room of the "White Lion Hotel," a house not more than two or three hundred yards from the bank. The twelve good men and true were either tradesmen or private householders of the town, all of whom had known, and most of them had done business with, the late Mr. Hazeldine.

After viewing the body, which still lay in the room where it had been found, the jury went back to the hotel. The proceedings were watched by Mr. Prestwich, solicitor, retained by Mr. Edward Hazeldine, on behalf of the relatives of the deceased. Mr. Mace and three of his men were in attendance.

The first witness called was Clement Hazeldine, who identified the body of the deceased as that of his father.

The next witness was John Brancker, who deposed to deceased having left the bank during the forenoon of the previous day, with the intention of going to London to change notes to the amount of about twelve hundred pounds for gold. When he left the bank he took with him the black bag which was always made use of on such occasions. It was not often witness went on to say, that Mr. Hazeldine himself went to London to obtain change, that was a duty which more frequently devolved upon him, witness; still, it sometimes happened that deceased had other business to transact in town, in which case he would bring back the gold himself.

David Measom, the railway booking-clerk, deposed to having sold deceased a first-class return ticket to London and back by the ten-thirty train on the previous day.

Obed Sweet, night-watchman, deposed to the events as detailed in a previous chapter: To seeing Mr. Hazeldine enter the bank about half-past eight

It isn't much trouble for a really healthy man to be good humored. Jollity and exhuberant health are a proverbial combination. The hearty man who is always laughing doesn't have any trouble with his digestion. It has been said that laughing makes people healthy. The truth is that health makes people laugh.

It is impossible to estimate the tremendous influence of health upon human character. A man with a headache will not be in a happy, contented frame of mind. A man who suffers from a weak stomach and an impaired digestion will sit and grumble through the best meal ever prepared. A bilious man who is not a bore, is deserving of a place in a museum. A nervous man who is not petulent and fault-finding is a curiosity. All these conditions lead to grave diseases, when the victim becomes not only disagreeable, but dependent as well. A wise wife will realize that while the old saying that a "man's heart is in his stomach," is not literally true, it is a fact that his stomach sweetens or sours his character according as it is healthy or unhealthy. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is the best of medicines for the conditions described. It makes the weak stomach strong, the impaired digestion perfect, invigorates the liver, purifies and enriches the blood and tones the nerves. It tears down half-dead, inert tissues and replaces them with the firm muscular tissues of health. It builds new and healthy nerve fibres and brain cells. It dissipates nervousness and melancholy and imparts mental elasticity and courage. It is the best of all known medicines for nervous disorders.

"Through your skillful treatment I am once more a well man," writes J. N. Arnold, Esq., of Gandy, Logan Co., Nebr. "I suffered for years and could not find relief until I commenced taking your 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I suffered with constipation and torpidity of liver which resulted in irritation of the prostate and inflammation of the bladder. I had only taken one bottle when I found great relief. The medicine has effected a permanent cure."

BILLY'S GETTING OLD.

Billy once was widely envied
By his fellow men;
Handsome Billy spent his money
Very free'y then;
Now his following has dwindled,
Since he hoards his gold,
And he goes to church on Sundays—
Billy's getting old!

Billy used to be the greatest
Ladies' man in town;
Billy's gorgeous entertainments
Won him wide renown;
Billy used to have a figure
Graceful to behold,
Now he stoops his knees are shaky—
Billy's getting old!

Oft in former days we've seen him
With his blooded pair,
And some flattering one beside him,
Radiantly fair!
Now his chin rests on his breast in Many a flabby fold,
And his coachman holds the ribbons—
Billy's getting old!

There were suppers for sweet singers
And merry dancers, too;
There were yacht rides he was captain
And fair women formed his crew;
But the suppers and the frolics
On the deck and in the hold Serve no longer to amuse him—
Billy's getting old!

Yesterday I saw him driving
Out to get the air;
No gay woman sat beside beside him,
Radiantly fair;
O'er his eye a film had gathered,
On his hair the mold
That relentless Time spreads over—
Billy's getting old.

Once his faithful wife was lonely,
Others claimed his smiles;
She was left to think and ponder
Over woman's wiles,
But to-day her breast is laden
With a joy untold—
He has drifted back unto her—
Billy's getting old!

SHE NEVER MADE MISTAKES.

But Nevertheless She Went Straightway to Another Place

She was a fine, distinguished-looking woman, with beautiful gray hair and eyes that spoke the brilliancy of her mind. There were lines about her chin, however, that easily indicated the firmness of her decision when once her mind was settled on any given point.

All these things were apparent when she walked into the Chinese laundry office, and, handing a queerly-marked slip of paper to the almond-eyed celestial behind the counter, gently asked for her shirtwaists.

and your mother—in this dreadful affliction. How little we know what a day—nay, an hour—may bring forth!" The Earl had a habit of indulging in mild platitudes, which he enunciated with an air of profundity which almost lent them a touch of freshness. "I left home the bearer of an invitation to you to dine at the lodge to-morrow, but that, of course, is now out of the question. It will be Agnes' birthday"—Agnes was Miss Winterton—"so her ladyship is going to ask a quiet half-dozen to dinner, and you were to have been of the number."

A glow of satisfaction burnt for a moment in Edward Hazeldine's cheeks. Even at a time like the present he could not help feeling a keen sense of gratification that his name should have been remembered on such an occasion. Might he not accept it, he asked himself, as an augury of the good fortune that would attend him when the time should have come for him to put to Miss Winterton a certain momentous question?

As soon as the Earl had gone, Edward's eyes fell on the heap of unopened letters left there from morning. Business must go on whatever happens, and it was with a sense of relief that he endeavored to bring his mind [illegible] to the [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible] took the letters one after another, opened them, read his mind took in their contents automatically, but his real mind was back at the bank—he was gazing again on that ghastly, upturned face, on those sightless eyes into which no light of recognition would ever flash more. Only last night he had been sitting by his father's side, worrying him about the details of a paltry debt of twenty pounds, hardly noticing how ill and careworn he looked, parting from him in his usual offhand, careless fashion; only last night—and now!

There was one letter still left unopened. He took it up and looked first at the address, as he always made a point of doing. There was a familiar look about the writing and yet he could not call to mind whose it was. Without more ado he tore open the envelope, and then he saw in a moment that the letter inside was in his father's writing. He was startled, to say the least. His father had not written to him since he was a school-boy, unless it was now and then two lines of invitation to dinner, or on some equally trivial matter. What could he possibly have to say to him now? Before beginning to read the letter he took up the envelope again and saw that it bore the London post-mark of the day before; then he turned to the signature as if to make sure that it really was his father's writing. Then he drew his chair a little nearer the window and began to read.

CHAPTER VIII

The following is a copy of Mr. Hazeldine's letter to his son:

Oct. 5, 18—.

'My Dear Edward—When these lines reach you, he who writes them will be no longer among the living. The end of my days is at hand. I am about to go hence, and be no more seen.

"Three months ago I consulted two eminent London specialists with reference to the state of my health. For some time I had had reason to believe that my heart was seriously affected, but I had shrank from turning doubt into certainty. At length, however, I did so, and the verdict proved to be little more than confirmation of my own secret fears. Both the men I consulted or at the seaside, I generally contrived to find my way to Doncaster for the St. Leger; and over and over again I have gone through the whole gamut of a gambler's hopes, fears, exultations and despair.

"Of late years, however, I have given up having anything to do with the turf, and have confined myself to transactions on the Stock Exchange. Three years ago I was worth twenty thousand pounds; to-day I am a ruined man. I wanted to turn my twenty thousand into fifty, and it seemed so easy to do it that I had not the courage to withhold my hand. Even now I have faith to believe that I could retrieve my fortunes were time given me to do so, but time is the one thing I can no longer call my own. The anxieties of the last few months have told terribly upon me, and I feel that the end may come at any moment. Besides which Mr. Avison will be at home in the course of a few days.

"You may, perhaps, ask in what way the return of Mr. Avison can affect me, unless it serve to transfer some of the cares of business from my shoulders to his, and, in so far, prove a source of relief to me. But, Edward, I dare not meet him! When I tell you [illegible] what I [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Another Rumor.

The Toronto World of Tuesday contains the following paragraph: The local detectives are looking for four men for whose capture a liberal reward is offered. The men are wanted for robbing a bank at Elton, Iowa, and many other burglaries. It is supposed that they are also responsible for three safe robberies at Sarnia last July, and they are also suspected of being concerned in the Napanee bank robbery, as they were in that neighborhood when it occurred. The fugitives are: Samuel J. Pitchie, alias Sam Scott, an ex-saloon-keeper, who is considered an expert at safe-blowing; Joseph Menaud, also known as "Little Joe" and "the Indian," a French-Canadian, with a scar on his forehead; Robert Durkin, alias Murray, the oldest man in the party, who belongs to Toronto, and Donald Cameron, alias "Red" Cameron, a tall, slick gambler, who frequents country fairs and circuses.

Circled the Globe.

At the time that Mr. Herrington despatched his jubilee post card on its trip around the world via San Francisco, Mr. Harvey Warner despatched a similar card via London, England. The card left Napanee on June 30th and arrived back on Nov. 12th after haying circled the globe It bears evidence of having had a hot time on its voyage and the postal authorities were liberal with ink in stamping it. The original address is obliterated. In addition to the Canadian postage stamps it now contains Japanese, Siam and Italian stamps. It also bears the signatures, and dates of arrival, of the British consuls at Rome, Italy, Bangkok, Siam and Tokio, Japan. Mr. Herrrington's card was an easy winner in the race having a lead of twelve days. All of which goes to show that if you intend to make a jubilee post card of yourself and go around the world you can lop twelve days off the journey by going via San Francisco.

Mr. Pepler Honored.

A dispatch from Guelph says: "Mr. A. Pepler, who has been in charge of the Dominion Bank here for the past five years, and has recently been promoted to the managership of the branch at Napanee, was entertained on the 9th inst. to a dinner at the Priory Club by some 30 of the leading business men and merchants of the city. The chair was occupied by Mr. J. M. Duff, manager of the Bank of Commerce, and the vice-chair by Mr. Hugh McMillan, barrister. Mr. Pepler replied to the toast of "Our Guest," and regretted that he had to leave Guelph, where he and Mrs. Pepler had made so many friends and acquaintances. Speeches were made by Mr. D. Guthrie, Q.C., Col. Macdonald, Q.C., Dr. McKinnon, John Mitchell, A. L. Dunbar, Mr. Staunton (Mr. Pepler's successor) and a number of others, expressive of their regret at Mr. Pepler's departure. Mr. and Mrs. Pepler left to day for Napanee, and take with them the well-wishes of numerous friends of Guelph.

Return of the Hunters.

Messrs. W. H. Hunter, W. Light and Thos. Symington returned from their hunting trip in the back country on Friday night. They brought back with them as trophies of the chase two fine deer, a couple of antlers, and a nice box of speckled trout. They had a real enjoyable time and may possibly charter a special train to bring in the balance of their game. On the mountains, about twenty miles back of Plevna, there was a foot of snow when they left on Friday. "Our Lady of the Snows" is no doubt camping back there, feasting on venison.

Thousands wear these goods with satisfaction, you can be benefitted likewise,

Three Days in The Woods.

Wm. Miller, of Napanee, had an experience while deer hunting in North Addington last week that he will remember until his dying day. One morning he went to see a friend to transact business, but he was away from home. He was directed to where he was and he started through the woods for the spot. He lost his way. The first night he built a fire and walked about it. Next day he sought for a clearing but only found an old shanty. The third day he wandered around and again took shelter in the shanty. The fourth day he could not get out as he was too weak for lack of food to move. That day his friends discovered him and he was nourished. Mr. Miller was three days and four nights without food and had a very narrow squeak for his life.

Thursday next, 25th November, having been appointed a day of general thanksgiving throughout the Dominion, there will be service in the church of S. Mary Magdalene at 10:30 a.m. consisting of shortened matins and celebration of holy communion. A new te deum and anthem have been prepared for the occasion. The sermon will be preached by the Rev. D. F. Bogart, R. D. of S. John's church, Belleville.

A Sudden Death.

It is with regret we have to announce the death of Mr. Daly Thomas, an old and respected resident of Odessa. Mr. Thomas was in the village on Saturday afternoon and got up on Sunday morning and proceeded to do his usual morning's work. On his return to the house he partook of breakfast and laid himself down on a couch. His wife came to him and requested him to shave himself. He immediately jumped up, and fell down dead. Mrs. Thomas was alone with him in the house. Much sympathy is felt for her and the family in their bereavement.

Gentlemen, Does Your Bald Head Make You susceptible to Cold?

Just think of how quickly the lost hair can be replaced. Prof. Dorenwend can do it in five minutes and do it so perfectly that no falseness is recognizable. Leading citizens everywhere are wearing them and none would be without one. If you are partly or wholly bald you are making a big mistake if you neglect to get one of these art hair coverings, they are not to be compared to old fashion wigs that some would be wig-makers construct. Prof. Dorenwend's skill in this line is unprecedented and he invites you to call for a practical demonstration at Paisley House, Napanee, on Thursday December 2nd.

Reduced In Price.

The Globe, Toronto, has reduced the price of its morning edition from $6 to $4, and discontinued the second edition. The Globe seldom does things by halves, and this is certainly a strong and deserving bid for circulation. In the announcement of the change it is stated that the great reduction in the price of paper and the introduction of typesetting machines have made this possible, but, considering the great expense that they incur in their efforts to secure all the news every day and the exceedingly full reports that they give of all important events, $6 per year was not too much to pay. At $4 per year their circulation should soon reach the 50,000 mark, especially as all the departments, including their excellent Saturday illustrated edition, are to be kept up to their present high standard The Globe is generally recognized as the leading paper in Canada, and their effort to make it possible for every person to take it regularly should meet with a hearty response.

They Should Be Punished.

Blackmail is very common in Kingston. It is said that two prominent men who were friendly with other men's wives have had to put up $1 000 within the present month as "hush" money. Men in poor circumstances conspire with their wives to blackmail men, reported to have money The other day a Kingston man, who owed his landlord $100 for rent, hit upon the following plan to liquidate the claim. He invited the property owner to call at his house on a certain date when he agreed to pay him the rent. He arranged matters so that he would have another man in the house when the landlord called. When he saw the landlord coming he and his friend retired to a shed to inspect a horse. The wife of the tenant received the visitor, and as soon as she saw him, she fainted. He assisted her to a sofa, and then she seized him by the neck and yelled. Her husband and companion ran in and caught the man with the woman's arms around his neck. He was tackled and knocked down. He then became penitent, and forgave the man his rent of $100 and promised to pay $500 in cash besides. He was kept a prisoner in the house until after the money was drawn from the bank and paid over to the tenant. The landlord was then allowed to go.

The fall assizes will open before Chief Justice Meredith, at the court house here, on Monday. The docket is the lightest for many years, and there is but one jury case, in the civil actions, that of Fitchett vs. Mellow. A very clever robbery was committed at Trenton last week and one that was worked on similar lines to the Dominion Bank burglary. On Friday morning last it was discovered that the Canadian Express Company's office had been entered and robbed of $3,000. The door was unlocked and the vault opened by the combination. Several detectives have arrived upon the scene and some go as far as to even hint that they have a clue.

A very interesting ceremony was celebrated on Tuesday morning at nine o'clock in St. James' church, when Rev. J. K. Macmorine, rector, assisted by Rev A. L. Geen, Belleville, united in marriage Miss Jessie Agnes Phippen, daughter of S. S. Phippen, ex-secretary and treasurer of the public school board, and Rev. R. S. Forneri, rural dean of Lennox and Addington, and rector of the parish of Adolphustown. The bride was attired in a travelling gown of dark green, and was assisted by her sister, Miss Katie Phippen, who wore a costume of grey cloth. Rev. A. L Geen assisted the groom as well as taking part in the service. The bride entered the church leaning upon the arm of her cousin, W. N. Linton, who took her father's place at the altar. The only guests were immediate relatives. After the ceremony Rev. R. S. and Mrs. Forneri drove to the Grand Trunk station and took a train westward for a honeymoon tour. Returning ten days hence they will take up their residence at the rectory, Adolphustown. The bride was well known in musical circles, having been a member of the choir in St. James' church for a number of years, and assisting in concerts in the city and vicinity for a long period. She was always a favorite that was in demand. She was one of the best workers in St. James' congregation and took an active part in every movement having for its object the advancement of the interests of the church. It is not surprising, therefore, that on the eve of her wedding she should be waited on by the rector and a number of the workers, who on behalf of the appreciative congregation, presented Miss Phippen with a handsome silver tea service, accompanied by a complimentry address in which the loss the church sustained by the departure of so valued a worker was set forth, as well as wishing the recipient every success in her new field of labor. At the ceremony this morning the entire choir turned out to assist in the service. The congregation will hereafter greatly miss the sweet voice of one whose face they have long been accustomed to see in the choir stalls.—Kingston Whig.

Hunt Club Dinner.

Mr. W. H. Hunter, the genial proprietor of the Royal Hotel, inaugurated the Royal Hotel Hunt Club Dinner on Monday evening last and all present voted it a decided success and hoped it would blossom out into an annual affair. Mr. Hunter has been out in the back country chasing the elusive deer for the past two weeks and on his return he decided to entertain a number of his friends to a dinner at the Royal. When Harry essays a thing its success is assured and the dinner provided was indeed a royal repast, fit for the gods. The dinner and the manner in which it was served reflects great credit on the ladies of the house and we feel that we cannot do better than append the bill of fare:

Herrington did in a neat speech, and they were both heartily received. Mr. Hunter responded briefly, expressing his pleasure at their company and thanking them for their attendance. The absence of post-prandial addresses was looked upon by many as a pleasing feature of the evening. The assemblege dispersed about 12 o'clock, all voting Harry "a jolly good fellow."

N. C. I. Concert

The N. C. I. Athletic Society's concert in the assembly hall of the Collegiate on Friday evening last was a pronounced success. Mr. F. W. French made a highly acceptable chairman. The presentation of the prizes won on the annual day of sports proved an interesting feature of the evening. The presentations were made by Rev. W. W. Peck, Rev. Dr. Crothers, Rev. C. Parker, and H. Maurice Walsh, the boy elocutionist, merited all the good words said of him and his various selections elicited rounds of applause Mrs. F. E. Vanluven sang in her usual pleasing manner and Miss Crother's selection on the violin was highly appreciated. Miss Templeton rendered an instrumental solo in an able manner and Mr. Jewell rendered a fine solo. The Athletic Society wish to express their thanks to those who so ably contributed to the programme

Want a Poor House.

The town council held their regular meeting on Monday evening and had quite an interesting time of it. Reeve Leonard occupied the chair, and in the charmed circle Boyle, Dey, Alexander, Ming, Carson, Miller, Lowry and Aylsworth were seated After the minutes of the last regular meeting were confirmed a deputation, consisting of U. Wilson, M. P., Jas. Daly, P. M., S. Gibson, Dr Bissonnette, Mrs. A. W. Grange, Mrs. W. Embury, Mrs. F. Burrows, Mrs. W. T. Gibbard, and Mrs. Wm. Templeton invaded the council chamber and were heard in reference to the formation of the Benevolent Society. Mr. U. Wilson, M. P., introduced the deputation in a few well chosen words. Mr. James Daly then addressed the council in reference to the object of the society, and urged the necessity for the erection of a poor house. He stated that at every session of the assizes the judges complained at the practice of committing vagrants and paupers to gaol and he had no doubt that in the near future the practice would be stopped by legislation. The government granted $4,000 as an inducement for counties to erect Houses of Refuge, but if it were made compulsory to erect them this privilege would no doubt be withdrawn. In other counties Houses of Refuge had been made self sustaining. Mrs. A. W. Grange addressed the council on the details of work proposed to be done by the society and urged on the council to give substantial assistance to further the success of the project. Mr. S. Gibson also favored the erection of a poor house. He dealt with the proposed work of the society. Each ward would look after its own poor. A committee of five, one of whom acted as convener, would have charge of the work in each ward and they were to investigate and report all cases brought to their attention. To be a success the society should work in conjunction with the Poor and Sanitary Committee of the council. Dr. Bissonnette was of the opinion that a poor house would prove a paying institution. Deputy-Reeve Madole and Couns. Aylsworth and Alexander favored the views of the committee. Mr. Aylsworth thought the council should give the matter due consideration and it would be a good idea for the council to attend the meeting of the Benevolent Society in a body on Friday evening. Council then adjourned until Wednesday evening.

Rudd Perry's sale took place on Monday at his farm in Violet. There was a big crowd present and a fairly good sale.

pass brought by the plaintiff, Spurrell Fitchett, against Samuel and Arthur Mellow, for damages, and to restrain and prevent the defendants from wrongfully entering and using the plaintiff's land and crossing over the same. The parties live in South Fredericksburgh. U. M. Wilson, for the pltf, G. F. Ruttan, for defendants.

Doller vs. Doller—An action to set aside the will of the late Louis F. Doller of North Fredericksburgh. This case was set down for last assizes but was not tried. Thos B. German for the pltf., English & Perry, Deroche & Madden, and Clute, Williams & Morden for defendants.

Light vs. Hawley—An action for damages for wrongfully depriving the plaintiff of certain goods and chattels. It appears that John Conger made an assignment to Sheriff Hawley. Previous to this Conger had given a chattel mortgage to T. E. Anderson, who assigned said mortgage to Jos. Light, the plaintiff. The Sheriff took possession of some of the goods in this chattel mortgage and sold them, and this action is brought to recover damages for selling these goods. Edglish & Perry for plaintiff, W. G. Wilson, for defendant.

OBITUARY.

MATHEW LOCHEAD.

Mathew Lochead was born in the Township of North Marysburgh, Prince Edward County, Nov. 19th, 1820 and passed away from this life at Newburgh on Oct. 15th., 1896. He was first married in early life to Miss Rachel Martin and nine children blessed their union, most of whom have passed over the bourne of time. In later life he was again married to Miss Elizabeth Asselstine who remains to mourn his loss. Brother Lochead was soundly converted more than half a century ago in a remarkable revival held at Selby (the home of his first wife) and joining the Wesleyan church remained a faithful member of Methodism until death. He was well-known and esteemed as an obliging citizen and consistent christian man in the wide circle of his acquaintances at Marysburgh, Richmond, Centreville, etc. The church remembers and honors him as a useful class leader, a sweet gospel singer and powerful in prayer and exhortation. He was almost entirely confined to his home for the past year because of feeble physical and mental health He fell asleep having served his generation and in great peace passed to his reward.

CURRENCY.

Some time ago the Toronto World announced that [illegible] Taylor would give wards and wondering what struck it.

PERSONALS.

Mrs. M. T. Rogers has returned to town for a few days.

Church of England Notes.

$1,000 to any man who could master the combination of one of their burglar proof safes. A subscriber, who is interested in Taylor's burglar proof safes, asks us to inquire of the World if any one of the combination experts mentioned by it accepted Mr. Taylor's offer. If not will the World kindly urge upon them to do, so as the subscriber is anxious to know if he should keep his valuables in his safe or carry them in his sock.

Talking about safes, was the one in the Express Office at Trenton burglar proof? If so some one of the employees of that corporation must have betrayed the trust reposed in him and helped himself to the company's money.

On the face of it it looks liks an impossibility to open a four wheeled burglar proof safe without a knowledge of the combination. Still we are told that this feat has been accomplished. Men with acute hearing and a highly developed sense of touch can manipulate any combination, it is alleged. We are even told stories of convicts from the penitentiary being secured to open safes the combinations of which had been forgotten or lost.

If there are men in the penitentiary who can work combinations the Government should grant them an opportunity of demonstrating it. It would clear up the doubt that exists and Taylor's $1,000 would help the convict to lead an honest life when he regained his liberty.

A Mr. Clarry has brought action against the Grand Trunk Railway. He bought a ticket from Harrisburg to Stratford, via Galt and Berlin. When he got to Galt he found he would have to take a bus from one G. T. R. station in that town to another, for which the charge was ten cents extra. His ticket did not call for extras and he entered action against the G. T. R. to recover the amount. Clarry's case was non suited but he has appealed and the Divisional Court at Toronto has reserved judgment.

In this matter Clarry doesn't care a hang about the ten cents—it's the principle involved. A kicker of this description is not an unmitigated nuisance. The kicker may succeed in making himself generally disagreeable but he often proves a human benefactor.

Clarry's kick will cost him a lot of time, trouble, and expense, but if he carries his point the public will reap the benefit. The G. T. R. will then be forced to carry their passengers from one station to the other free of charge.

Almost every one has had some experience with the trunk-smashing baggageman. He has about outlived his usefulness but when he was at the summit of his glory he used to take a fiendish delight in marring the symmetry of passengers trunks His unhappy victims hardly ever sought redress.

It is related that one day a burly baggage man held a trunk aloft and with a broad grin on his face let it drop, with a resounding smash, on its end. He accomplished his purpose—the trunk was ruined. The owner approached the baggage man and politely requested him to settle for the trunk. The railway man simply laughed at him. But the man was a kicker. Although important business demanded his attention elsewhere he stopped at the place three days and at a loss of $30 to himself succeeded in making the baggage man pay for the trunk as well as the costs of the action. He lost money, but he did the travelling public a great service.

A complaint has been lodged against the Chief-of-Police. They say he is too officious—kicks at trifles. A good, strong, kicker is required in this town. Things have been tolerated that should have been kicked over long ago The Chief's course may prove disagreeable to some but then again it may redound to the benefit of the town.

Talking about kickers the Star staff has the awful gall to challenge the combined staffs of THE EXPRESS and Beaver to a friendly game of foot ball. Cæsar's ghost, if the game transpires, we won't do a "fing" but knock the twinkle out of the Star. It will be spelling its name back-

While he is rational enough most of the time he has moments of mental aberration. The other day he gave a graphic discription of the devil, or a devil, that had visited him in his cell during the night.

Troy has great discriptive powers and his portrayal of the appearance of the devil that visited him shows that it must have left a vivid impression on his mind. Troy's devil differs from the popular conception of his Satanic Majesty.

Nemesis, in the form of a guilty conscience, has been camping on Troy's trail and he feels that his sin has found him out. He thinks that he has committed an unpardonable offense for which he must pay the penalty. Something impelled him to make the confession which implicated him in the murder of Angus McLeod.

Troy cannot realize the enormity of his crime, although he has been trying hard to do so. He has left hope behind and is indifferent as to his fate. He doesn't think he will be hanged, but he believes that he will be fittingly punished and an example made of him by some unseen power.

While it may be admitted that Troy is a little queer the view may be held that he is sane enough to hang. The question naturally arises, does Troy entertain a spite against Hughes? That he is of a vindictive nature is borne out by his past record and his own words.

At Hughes' trial, which will take place next week, the crown will seek to corroborate Troy's story by bringing forward witnesses to prove that the two men were in Port Hope together, and left that town for Napanee.

Troy asserts that there is no feeling in his head. He states with all seriousness that at times his head is as soft as putty, and that at other times it is as hard as a rock. There is no doubt that Troy was born with the taint of crime in his blood. He could no more help going sideways than a crab. We venture to say that if his genealogy was traced you would find that he was "Cursed from the very beginning,

By deeds that others had done;
More sinned against than sinning,
And so is many a one."

TOWN COUNCIL.

The council held a special meeting on Wednesday night, Reeve Leonard presiding. Present, Alexander, Boyle, Madole, Carson, Miller, Aylsworth.

To the Electors of Lennox

GENTLEMEN,—

Having been chosen by the Liberal Party of Lennox as their candidate at the next election, I wish publicly to thank the party for the confidence reposed in me in tendering me the nomination. Since the meeting of the convention at which I was so chosen I have visited many parts of the riding and have met with most encouraging support, both from Liberals and old time Conservatives.

I have been asked to outline my policy, and in brief I may say that it shall ever be my policy to study the needs of the people of this Province in general and of this riding in particular, and to use my best endeavors to advance what I believe to be the best interests of my constituents. I unhesitatingly announce my faith in the general policy of Mr. Hardy and his colleagues, because I believe it has been, and is, their aim to conduct the affairs of the Province in an honest and business like manner. The very fact that the Opposition has failed to point out a single instance of corruption during a period of twenty-five years is conclusive evidence to my mind of the purity of the adminstration. While I am a believer in the ability, honesty and integrity of the present Government, I reserve to myself the right to criticize that Government in all matters when I feel it is to the public interest to do so. I most emphatically repudiate any intention upon my part to blindly follow any man or any set of men.

I have also been asked my views upon the question of granting bonuses to the manufacturers of iron. I am not in sympathy with this policy, because I do not believe it to be to the best interests of the majority of the people of this province, and if elected I will use my influence against the present bonus system.

Between now and the day of the election I hope to have an opportunity of discussing the public questions of the day with all of the electors of Lennox, and to carefully weigh any suggestions relating to the public good, as my sole aim, if elected, will be to honestly represent the people of Lennox in all matters coming before the House.

Thanking you for the generous support accorded me in the past, which I shall confidently rely upon in the future, I remain,

Your obedient servant

B. E. AYLSWORTH.

PRINCE EDWARD COUNTY.

The Prince Edward County Sabbath School Convention was held in the First Methodist Church here, on Duesday, January 25th inst., when a large and interested audience assembled. Lively addresses and speeches were interspersed throughout the proceedings, on the various subjects brought forward, particularly on the normal training of teachers. A very telling address was given by Alfred Day, Esq., general secretary. The proceedings throughout were characterized by a telling interest in Sabbath School work which has been unequalled in our county for a number of years.

PICTON.

Napanee and Picton hockey clubs have come together and played an interesting match on Picton King st. rink, which proved disastrous to the Napanee club, Picton club being victorious by 4 to 2.

The thermometer dropped to twenty below zero on Thursday, and on Sunday four degrees lower.

On Friday, January 21st, William McCornock, aged 79 years, one of the oldest and most respected residents of the Township of North Marysburgh, was found badly bruised and in an unconscious state in his cow stable. It appears that he had been knocked down by one of the cattle and trampled upon, and being alone receiving internal injuries which resulted in his death on the following Sunday, and was interred in the family graveyard on Tuesday, Jan. 25th, Glenwood cemetery. His funeral was largely attended.

Friday evening, January 28th, one of the big events of the season took place at Demorestville, in the way of a chicken pie dinner, given under the auspices of the Methodist church. Mr. R. Dobson, B. A., High School Glee Club, Miss Butler, Miss Lorne, and several others of Picton talent took part in the programme. Proceeds, $90.

The county council granted the sum of $100 to aid in establishing a Protestant Orphans' Home in Picton.

Mr. John Bongard left on Saturday evening with a car of 19 horses for the English market.

The market on Saturday, January 29th, was small but prices were good; potatoes from 60c to 70c per bag, butter 14c to 16c per lb., eggs 18c to 20c per doz., chicken 40c to 60c per pair, beef 3½c to 5c per lb., pork $5.50 per 100 lbs.

NEWBURGH.

On Saturday evening, January 25th, the the second grand Masquerade Carnival was held on the Newburgh rink and would have resulted in a great success had the evening turned out a favorable one. As it was about 200 hundred assembled to enjoy the old time sport. The following persons were in costume:

Snow Flake Sisters—Miss Eva Madden, Miss Gertrude Files.
Chinaman—Wilbur Paul.
Judie—Maurice Paul.
Lawn Tennis Players—R. Lott, W. Dunn.
Charles II—Fred Shorts.
New Woman—Fred Miles.
Bridget—Eby Paul.
Darky—Ray Vanalstine.
Uncle Sam—R. Frye.
Sambo—Meaford Conway.

The boys race proved to be the most exciting event of the evening. About seventeen entered, and five finished up with Wilfred Sutton in the lead. In the event of best gentleman skater, Mr. W. Dunn, of Napanee took the prize. There were no entries in the "best lady skater in costume" event. The young ladies of Newburgh are of course very bashful and do not like to make a start alone. It is to be hoped the proprietors of the rink will strike upon a better evening if they have another carnival. It has been rumored however that there will be one in the near future with the Yarker Band in attendance. If this event should take place it is to be hoped the people of the village will encourage the affair and give the promoters their support.

AN IMPORTANT CASE.

A Pedlar Sent to Prison For Representing an Imitation Pill to be the Same as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills—A Far Reaching Decision.

MONTREAL, Jan. 24, 1898.—A case of more than ordinary interest to the public came before Judge Lafontaine here to-day, the facts being as follows: For some time past one H. E. Migner has been going about pedling a pill which he represented as being the same as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The Dr. Williams Medicine Co. placed the matter in the hands of Detective Haynes, of the Canadian secret service, who soon had collected sufficient evidence to warrant the arrest of Migner on a charge of obtaining money under false pretences. Meantime Migner had left Montreal, going to St. John, N.B. On his arrival in that city he was at once placed under arrest and an official sent to bring him back here. He was brought before Judge Lafontaine this morning on two charges, and pleaded guilty to both. It was pointed out that his offence was a grave one and left him liable to a lengthy term of imprisonment. The counsel for the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co. stated that his clients did not wish to establish the fact that representing an imitation pill to be the same as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills was a crime which left the perpetrator liable to a lengthy imprisonment. On one charge the judge then imposed a sentence of ten days, with the option of a fine of ten dollars, and in the other case a sentence of two days in jail without the option of a fine.

This decision is likely to have a far reaching effect, as it seems to establish the principle that substituters and those who sell imitations representing them to be "the same as" Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, are liable under the criminal code, which is in force all over the Dominion, and it will no doubt, to a considerable extent, put an end to this nefarious business, as it is evident from the fact that the Dr. Williams Medicine Co. went to the expense of bringing this man back from so great a distance as St. John, that they intend sparing no expense to protect both the public and themselves in such cases.

THE SLOAN MEDICINE CO.

Dear Sirs—For years I was troubled with periodical sick headaches, being affected usually every Sunday, and used all the remedies that were advertised as cures, and was treated by almost every doctor in Guelph but without any relief. One doctor told me it was caused by a weak stomach, another said it was hereditary and incurable. I was induced by a neighbor to try Sloan's Indian Tonic, and am happy to say I did so. A few doses gave immediate relief, and one bottle and a half made a complete cure.

This was three years ago and the headaches have never returned. I was also troubled with asthma and nothing helped me like your Sloan's Indian Tonic. I can heartily recommend it to all and will be glad to give any particulars to any one afflicted as I was.

"THE Province is on the verge of direct taxation" cries Mr. Whitney. This hoary-headed old chesnut did service for the opposition 15 years ago. It is time for a change.

THE majority of people don't appreciate a thing at its true worth until they have lost it. The affairs of Ontario have been so long wisely and economically administered that the ratepayers have come to accept it as a matter of course. While they are satisfied with the existing state of affairs it is doubtful if they are sensible of the time, patience and devotion to the affairs of the Province entailed on the members of the Government in placing Ontario in the very satisfactory position she occupies to-day. While the parrot cry, "It is time for a change," finds no echo in the hearts of the electorate of this province, that very undesirable change may be brought about by apathy or a sense of false security on the part of the friends of the Ontario Government. The very weakness of the opposition may prove its source of strength. There are no great issues before the people in this campaign. Mr. Whitney has no policy and advances no valid reasons why a tried and honest administration should be replaced by his discredited aggregation. Beyond insuring the return of the Reform Government the people are not interested in the campaign. Hardy's return is looked upon as a foregone conclusion and the chief danger is that a fancied security may induce many to neglect recording their votes. It is an unwise thing to underrate your opponent. It is alleged that the Conservatives are counting for success on the apathy of the Reformers. As eternal vigilance is the price of liberty

A CALL TO ARMS.

To the Editor of THE EXPRESS.

SIR—Will you allow me to say a few words through your columns to some of our party friends.

We have had good government, good clean sensible progressive business-like government, so long in Ontario, that we are quite apt to grow careless, and feel that it would naturally always continue to be so. If we should have to undergo in our provincial affairs for many years such an incapable wasteful corrupt regime, a regime so entirely unfriendly to farmers and agriculture, as obtained in Ottawa so long, we would then have a very lively and wideawake appreciation of the value of good government.

Now it is a good deal easier to keep good government while we have it, than to get it back again after it is once lost. Therefore we should all strongly and actively support the unanimous nominee af the Reform party, Mr. Bowen E. Aylsworth.

I know the leaders of the opposition have made a great noise about some supposed transactions. Some people can make mountains out of mole-hills. If the glass through which you look at a mole-hill have great magnifying power enough, you'll think you are seeing a mountain. But sensible people needn't keep on looking through the glass or delude themselves very long that it is really a mountain they are looking at.

The Globe, which, by the way is the fairest, clearest, and best paper of its class in the Dominion, and I may say here that for $1.25 you can get both the EXPRESS and Globe for a year, the best value you ever got for the cheapest money—the Globe quietly, calmly, reasonably and clearly shows how unwarranted were the attacks, and how immensely exaggerated were the misrepresentations of the Opposition leaders. Their great mountains were really nothing but little mole-hills about an inch high.

But for all that, if the Conservative party in this county can get their opponents divided so as to vote for two candidates, they the Conservatives will probably win. We know how often that trick has been tried before.

Now, my friends, just look at the logic I am going to put before you. If we want to keep and have responsible government in this country, we must have government by party. And if we are to have government by party, the members of the party must be loyal to, must loyally support the party nominee. Party government, (that is, responsible government) falls to the ground, if for every little difference we are to run off and support an independent candidate. It has an awfully fine attractive sound, this independent candidate idea; but in the practical working it amounts to a nullity, because all an independent candidate can do is either to support the government, or to support the opposition. But in the case of our county, an independent candidate is even worse than a nullity, because he is sure not to get in, in any event, and if he gets much of a vote, he is, by destroying the support of the Reform nominee, just so much helping to destroy those good principles of government, the most of which he is in favor of, though in some minor ways he may differ from them. But half a loaf is better always than no bread, and you may be sure we wouldn't get from the Conservatives any bread, but rather a stone.

Besides, an independent candidate can do noting for the county; while the Government candidate, Mr. Aylsworth, who on account of having been so long in public life knows the needs of our county and people better undoubtedly than any other man in it, can get, as any one who will at all consider must know, benefits from the government that no opposition or independent could get. THE WHITE KITTEN.

The dragoons rode here and there, shouting and cursing, and thrusting with their long swords into every bush that seemed dense enough to hide the body of a man. The memory of Prestonpans and Falkirk still rankled in their minds, and though the blood shed at Culloden and amid the grim scenes which followed that tragic death struggle might well have satiated their lust of slaughter, they hunted rather to kill than to capture, and a dead Jacobite was ever a more grateful sight to them than a living one.

Once or twice they had caught sight of their quarry, and the hillside had rung with shouts, the jingling of harness, the thud of hoofs and the cracking of pistols. But the man they hunted was on familiar ground, the estate of his father, a gentleman of Cumberland, and being quick-witted, agile and fleet of foot, he threw them off the scent again and again, and vanished among the rocks and bushes as though the earth had literally swallowed him up.

The troopers began to despair, to find something almost supernatural about the amazing activity and resource of the fugitive who had for hours contrived to evade them. Many of them had dismounted, and explored with dogged persistency every bush and cranny and clump of bracken; but their efforts proved fruitless, and they wandered about the hillside helpless and bewildered, and filled with admiration at the craft and speed, the quick shifts and tricks, of the invisible rebel.

Had anyone seen him, admiration would have been the last feeling suggested by his appearance. Hunted like a wild beast, with death threatening him on every hand, he was reduced to that condition of panic terror into which the bravest may fall when the odds against them are so great as to leave no hope of escape. With ashy face and bloodshot eyes, with bleeding hands, and clothes torn by rocks and brambles, he ran and crawled and crouched, gasping for breath and aching in every limb.

At length by a sudden rush, which by its very audacity passed unnoticed by the troopers, he succeeded in crossing an open space and gaining the shelter of a thick fringe of trees and bushes that bordered the side of a stream. Sheltered by the trees, he ran swiftly down the hillside in the direction of an ivy-clad ruin, for which he had been making ever since the dragoons first sighted him. It was an old priory, and contained a hilding place which he had discovered as a boy. It consisted of a niche in one of the high stone walls which had once held a statue. The niche was some six or seven feet from the grond, and was completely hidden by a thick growth of ivy. If he could contrive to clamber up, force his body through the ivy, and stand in the niche without being observed, he believed it would be impossible for the dragoons to discover him.

Another quick rush across the open brought him to the ruins, but as he scrambled among the loose heaps of stones he started back with a groan of despair. A little, fair-haired, blue-eyed girl was sitting on a stone at the foot of the wall, just beneath the very spot where the niche was situated. She was laughing gleefully at the antics of a tiny white kitten, that was pursuing a piece of string which she trailed before it on the grass. Now, with quivering limbs and waving tail, it crouched behind a stone or a tuft of grass till little more than the tips of its ears were visible, then sprang swift as a flash of light on its prey, only to dart away again with tail erect, frisking and gamboling back to its shelter.

But a fresh outburst of shouts from behind, as though a pack of hounds had recovered a lost scent, brought him face to face with the grim fact that in a few more seconds his pursuers would be upon him. What was he to do? He could fly no farther. As he reached the ruins, his limbs had sunk beneath him, and, choking for breath, with his heart beating like a flail, he had been forced

NAPANEE, FRIDAY, FEB. 4th 1898.

THE Toronto World is prepared to sacrifice Sir Charles Tupper.

HARDY is still on the go. He delivered a stirring address at Kingston on Monday night.

THE young men will be found arrayed for Hardy and good government on March 1st.

IT is satisfactory to know that the poor of Kingston will be benefitted by the Grant-Lucas debate. It is now in order to call in Spence and Kribs to throw some light on the subject of prohibition.

THE Ontario elections will take place on March 1st. The campaign will be short, sharp, and decisive and an honest earnest effort is all that is necessary to place Aylsworth and Wartman at the head of the polls.

IT is proposed to build the all Canadian railway to the Klondike without a cash subsidy from the Government. This is a decided change from the days of Conservative rule when the people were bled through the nose for every railway scheme projected.

THE Grant-Lucas debate differed in one respect from the little-red-school-house variety in that no allusion was made to Timothy, who is credited with taking a little wine for his stomach's sake. In justice to Messrs. Grant and Lucas it is necessary to add that the time at their disposal was limited.

IN arriving at its surplus the Ontario Government only takes into consideration such assets as are cash or the equivalent of cash. If it adopted the rule of any commercial concern and included in its statement the Parliament buildings, asylums, etc., and it has a perfect right to do so, the surplus would be over twelve millions of dollars. The Government has a cash surplus of $5,258,324, and its other assets, mostly paid for out of Indians and Bears.

The greatest bear country in the southwest is the Navajo Indian reservation, where the bears are never hunted and may live, multiply and growsold in peace, says the San Francisco Call. The Navajo believes that bruin is a sacred animal, and they will never kill or consent to have one killed except under one circumstance. This is when a bear has killed a red man and the identity of the culprit is as well established as that of the victim. Then, headed by their medicine men, half the tribe will gather at bruin's doorway, humbly beg his pardon for what is about to happen and pray to his shade not to look for vengeance. This done, one or two warriors will boldly penetrate the cave and kill the bear, which is then accorded a decent burial.

"MADE ME A NEW WOMAN."

The Life of Mrs. McMaster, of Toronto, is Saved.

A Case that Proved Too Difficult for the Physicians Yields to the Wondrous Virtues of Paine's Celery Compound.

A Signal Victory for the King of Medicines,

Pains Banished, Eyesight Quite Restored, and a New Life Begun.

WELLS & RICHARDSON CO.,

GENTLEMEN:—Ten years ago I was attacked with neuralgia, and though treated by six doctors, the disease grew worse and nearly drove me insane. I was for one summer an outdoor patient at the hospital here, but only got temporary relief.

I was sleepless for nights, my digestion was bad, and I would feel a pain in my stomach every time I ate anything. Day after day I suffered the most intense agony, and I often wonder I didn't go crazy. I took endless medicines given me by medical men, and getting worse, I became utterly disheartened.

One day my deliverance came. A lady who had suffered just as I had told me that Paine's Celery Compound had cured her. I used the Compound as a last resort, and it simply made a new woman of me. The pain vanished; my eyesight, which was impaired returned, and I felt myself growing well, and I never felt happier in my life. I am now well and strong, and all health and happiness are due to Paine's Celery Compound. I will always gratefully remember the medicine that cured me, and will speak a good word for it.

MRS. THOS. McMASTER.

a long experience in public affairs is one great element of success, and in this matter, no independent candidate in Lennox can compete with Mr. Aylsworth.

Again, there is another serious evil that we need to be aroused against. Over in the States, many public-spirited good influential men are banding themselves together with the object to arouse vast numbers of good men, members of churches, to take interest and part in public life, to support good men and measures in government; as they have hitherto left public affairs to drift into the management of unprincipled unscrupulous corrupt and villianous men, who are fast turning the country into a pandemonium. It is our business to take warning from the failure of others, and not wait for our own failure and then when it is too late, take warning. If, through negligence or carelessness or want of considerate loyalty to the Government party nominee, who is a good and thoroughly responsible man in every way, and who as every industrious business man must feel, must be at at great expenditure of time labor nerve and money in his canvass and candidature; if, I say, we don't hold up his hands and encourage him and work with him and sink minor differences, if such there be, we will be just opening the gates for the floods of such corrupt men, measures, and methods that are now swarming and battering in the cities across the line. A few foolish men, getting up an independent candidate may be able to annul not only their own hopes and principles, and those of all the progressive Liberals in this county, but for a long time to come, discourage any sensitive self-respecting man from trying to band together and lead to victory the Liberal regiment of Lennox. Besides, in the other Ontario counties, there is a numerous solid band of reliable men, who while they know that there are very good men who are loyal to the Conservative party, still see that that party has the unfair spirit of trying to further the interests of some classes, and sacrificing the rest of the people to them, while the Liberals are progressive business-like and up-to-date and fair to every class; and this band of reliable Liberals throughout Ontario always have and undoubtedly now will return the present administration to power in the coming elections. So that if we in this county want to be in the swim, and not sacrifice our principles and ruin our prospects, we must strenuously support, not an independent candidate, but the independent Reform nominee, B. E. Aylsworth.

Yours truly.

THREE WEEKS IN AGONY.

Inflammatory Rheumatism so Acute He Could Not Attend to His Daily Duties—Lived Three Weeks in Agonizing Pain when that "Good Samaritan" of all Cures, South American Rheumatic Cure, Passed His Way—It helped in a Few Hours, and Speedily Cured—Cost 75 Cents.

Mr. E. A. Norton, a well-known citizen of Grimsby, Ont., was severely attacked with inflammatory rheumatism some 20 years ago—after a time he recovered, but five or six weeks ago the dread disease returned so violently that he had to give up work. For nearly three weeks he lay in bed suffering terrible agony. Another resident of the town who had been cured by South American Rheumatic Cure persuaded him to try it, and, to his great surprise after using the medicine but one week he was so far recovered as to go about town. From the first dose taken he felt marked improvement, and to-day he is most enthusiastic in singing its praise. No case too severe for South American Rheumatic Cure to check in six hours and cure permanently.

to crawl forward on his hands and knees. The hiding place in the wall offered the only chance of safety, and it would be impossible to gain it unobserved if he wasted a moment.

He knew the child well enough by sight. Her name was Jessie Waters, and she was the daughter of a poor gentlewoman, whose husband, a naval officer, had been killed in an engagement with the French. Still, he feared that in his present ragged and dishevelled condition she might fail to recognize him, and by a scream of terror or a panic-stricken flight attract the attention of the dragoons.

He rose painfully to his feet and staggered forward. Terrified at the sight of this ragged, hatless man, with his haggard face and bloodshot eyes, the child leaped to her feet with a cry of fear, instinctively caught up the kitten, and was darting away when he clutched her by the arm.

"Let me go," she exclaimed, struggling frantically to get free, and sobbing with fright. "Oh, let me go!"

"Jessie," he said, desperately, "for Heaven's sake, listen to me, child. Look at me! don't you know me? Don't you remember me?"

As she looked up at him the terror died out of her eyes, and she half smiled through her tears.

"I'm Walter Neville," he continued, "the squire's son. Yes, I see you remember me now. Well, do you hear those men shouting?"

"Yes," she answered, timidly, looking up at him with the kitten purring and blinking in her arms.

"They're looking for me, and if they find me they'll kill me. I'm going to hide in a hole in the wall up there among the ivy. You won't tell them you know where I'm hiding, will you, Jessie?"

"N—no," she faltered; "but I'm frightened, and I—I want to go home."

"It's too late," he exclaimed; "you mustn't go home. They'll see you running away, and catch you, and bring you back and make you tell them where I'm hiding—and then they'll kill me. Sit down on the stone and play with the kitten, and they'll think you haven't seen me, and they won't look here at all."

The thud of the horses' hoofs and the jingling of spurs and bridles were now so close that he turned despairingly away from the bewildered child, and clutching the thick stems of the ivy, he put forth in one last desperate effort the remains of his strength, and scrambling upward, forced himself through the clustering leaves and branches into the niche. Peering out he saw her gazing upward with round, wondering eyes. If the troopers found her in that attitude it would mean certain discovery.

It was a strangely peaceful scene. The sunshine flooded the old, gray, ivy-clad ruin; a rabbit popped its head out of a cranny, and watched the child and her little playmate suspiciously; a starling, gay with speckled plumage, strutted supercilliously on the grassy plots between the walls, or chattered shrilly among the ivy.

His mind was filled with pictures of the past, in strange contrast with the scene before him. He saw Prince Charlie marching with fluttering kilts and plaid into Manchester, the white rose in his bonnet, a flush of triumph on his handsome face. He fought again at Falkirk, where these same dragoons had fled like deer; and again he seemed to hear the skirl of the pipes, and see the flash of the Highland broadswords as the clansmen poured like a torrent against the rock-like lines of steel and flame in their last wild charge at Culloden. Since then he had lived the life of a hunted beast, flying over endless moors, or scrambling among mist-enshrouded hills, scorched with the sun, drenched with rain, ill, exhausted, tortured with hunger and thirst, and with death ever at his heels.

To think that after all these exertions, all his clever shifts, and happy devices, and a score of hairbreadth escapes, he should be run to earth in sight of his own home, the goal he had been striving for, where he might expect sympathy and assistance, food and money, and the means to escape to France, was enough to break the stoutest heart. Glancing through the leaves, he could see the smoke rising from the chimneys of Moor hall, his old home, endeared to him by a thousand kindly memories, where loving hearts were mourning for him as one lost beyond hope. He shut his lips tight to stifle a groan of despair, for at that moment the rabbit disappeared in its burrow, the starlings took flight, and the troopers came galloping up to the ruins confident that they had at last run their quarry to earth.

But instead of playing with the kitten as Walter had hoped she would ride on in order that the dragoons would ride on without troubling to question her, the child crouched back among the ivy, staring with a white, frightened face at the bronze, fierce-looking men who came bursting in among the quiet old ruins, with a clatter of steel-shod hoofs and the loud jingling of spurs and scabbards. Most of them, indeed, seeing no sign of a possible hiding-place, passed by with an indifferent side-glance at the terrified little creature, but the last of all, a big, fleshy man, with a pale, puffy face and small, cruel eyes, asked roughly if she had seen a man go past, and, receiving no answer, swung off his horse, and approached her.

"Did you hear me, you brat?" he exclaimed. "Did you see a man go by?"

The child rose to her feet, and gazed up at him with tear-filled eyes and twitching lips, but made no answer.

"Haven't you a tongue in your head, or are you deaf?" he growled, angrily.

Another of the troopers had drawn rein and half turning in his saddle was curiously watching the scene.

"Leave the child alone, Dan," said he. "If she'd seen the fellow sulking about she'd have gone screeching home to her mother."

"Hold your tongue, you dull fool," answered Dan. "Do you think I don't know what I'm about? He may have seen her and threatened to eat her alive if she told us where he was hiding. But she'll soon find that's nothing of what she'll get from me if she doesn't speak out. Come, you cursed little rebel, do you want me to twist your ears off? Have you seen a strange man about here? Speak at once, or—"

He raised his hand as if to strike her, and she shrank back in alarm.

"Did you?"

He took a step forward.

"Did you?"

Terror-stricken at his grim face and threatening hand, she cowered trembling against the wall.

"Yes," she almost screamed.

Walter's blood ran cold. What madness could have possessed him to allow the child to see him enter the hiding-place? Nothing could save him now.

The dragoon looked around complacently at his comrade.

"What did I tell you, Dick?" he said. "We shall get at the truth now. I wager the fellow has some hiding-place here for which he has been making ever since we first sighted him. Now, then, you imp of satan, will you tell us where the man went to?"

Jessie's white, despairing face—as, still holding her tiny playmate in her arms, she shrank back from the trooper's upraised hand, might have touched the heart of anyone but the callous ruffian before her. But the brutal nature of the man was now thoroughly aroused by her stubborn silence. He thrust his evil, bloated face, flushed with anger, close to her own.

"Come, find your tongue, will you?" he exclaimed savagely.

She began to sob helplessly.

"Oh, I'm frightened," she cried, pitifully. "I want to go home—I want to go home."

"You shall go home when I'm done with you, and not before," he growled, wrenching a thick branch from a willow branch that grew near. He stripped off the leaves, and advanced threateningly towards her.

don, they became very good friends indeed.

If you ever pay a visit to Moor hall, to which the public can readily gain admittance when the family is from home, the housekeeper is almost certain to show you the portrait of a beautiful girl in bridal costume, with a slender gold chain about her white neck, who became mistress of the hall in 1775; and—if you do not appear to be a hopelessly unromantic sort of person—to tell you, far more effectively than I have done, the story of the white kitten. —Strand Magazine.

THE BLACK PRINCE'S ARMY.

The Largest English Fleet Ever Assembled Took the Soldiers to France.

Mr. W. O. Stoddard's serial, "With the Black Prince," gives in St. Nicholas an account of the splendid army that accompanied the prince to the battle of Crecy. Mr. Stoddard says:

It was the largest English fleet ye assembled, and the army going o board was also the best with which any English king had ever put to sea. It consisted of picked men only. Of these, 4,000 were men-at-arms, 6,000 were Irish, 12,000 were Welsh, but the most carefully trained and disciplined part of the force consisted of 10,000 bowmen. During a whole year had Edward and his sons and his generals toiled to select and prepare the men and the weapons with which they were to meet the highly famed chivalry of the continent. An army selected from a nation of perhaps 4,000,000 of people was to contend with an army collected from France with her 20,000,000, and from such allies of hers as Germany and Bohemia, re-enforced by large numbers of paid mercenaries. Among these latter were the crossbowmen of Genoa sold to Philip by the masters of that Italian oligarchy.

Edward's adventure had a seeming of great rashness, for already it was reported that the French king had mustered 100,000 men. Full many a gallant cavalier in armor of proof may well have wondered to hear, moreover, that Edward III, accounted the foremost general of his time, proposed to meet superior numbers of the best lances of Europe with lightly armored men on foot. They knew not yet of the new era that was dawning upon the science of war. Edward and his bowmen were to teach the world more than one new lesson before that memorable campaign was over. Before this he had shown what deeds might be wrought upon the sea by ships prepared and manned and led by himself. He had so crippled the naval power of his eneon the leaves, and advanced threateningly towards her.

"Do you see this?" he asked brutally. "Well, as sure as you're standing there, I'll break it across your back if you don't speak out at once."

But his companion, a brawny fellow, with a square, resolute face and keen gray eyes, sprang from the saddle and stepped before him.

"None of that," said he, "or you'll deal with me, Dan Rothwell, and you know yourself whether you're like to have the best of it. I've stood by and seen you do many a cursed cruel thing—more's the shame to me—but lay your hand on that child, and I'll lay my hand on you, as you'll find to your cost."

"Stand back, will you?" snarled Dan, with a savage scowl, trying to thrust him aside and strike at the whimpering child, who was clinging desperately to her protector.

"Not I. Keep your distance, I tell you. I've a little maid of my own, the living image of this one, and I'll wring your neck before you shall lay a finger on her."

"This will serve my purpose," said Dan, and dropping the switch he made a swift grab at the kitten, and catching it by the back of the neck twitched it out of the child's arms and held it sprawling in the air.

Then he drew his sword from the scabbard and flourished it over his head.

"Tell us where the man's hidden," he cried, triumphantly. "Out with it, you obstinate little jade, or I'll cut the cursed little brute in two."

"Let it alone," she cried, passionately. "How dare you take it from me? It's mine, and you shan't kill it."

Dan laughed sneeringly as he held it above her outstretched hands.

"Will you tell us where the man's hidden?" he exclaimed. "Come, will you, or won't you?"

"No, I won't," she cried, stamping her foot on the ground and facing him with flashing eyes, "I won't, I won't, I won't!"

"Then, suddenly realizing her own helplessness, she broke into sobs, and clung despairingly to Dick's arm.

"Oh, make him give it back to me," she cried, piteously. "Don't let him kill it. Oh, don't let him kill it."

Dick turned angrily on his comrade.

"Come," he said, sternly, "that's enough. Give it back to her, I tell you."

But at that moment, in its frantic efforts to escape, the kitten contrived to dig its sharp claws into his hand, and he dropped it, with an oath. Jessie darted forward to pick it up, but he thrust her violently on one side, and with a blow of his sword stretched it on the grass, twitching and writhing in the agonies of death. He was about to strike it again, when Dick's fist came like a sledge-hammer on the side of his head and sent him staggering half a dozen yards away.

"You hulking blackguard," shouted Dick; "you cowardly brute, will you never have done with your dirty tricks? 'Tis such as you that make us stink in the nostrils of the people. Begone, or as sure as there is a God in heaven I'll drive my sword through your black heart."

The other eyed him with a venomous look, but no doubt Dick was the better swordsman, for with a string of muttered curses he slunk away.

In the meantime Jessie had thrown herself on her knees by the side of her little companion, a moment ago so full of happy life, now a mutilated, bleeding corpse. She lifted it with trembling fingers, and placed it tenderly in her lap.

"Oh," she sobbed, piteously, "it's dead, it's dead, and it'll never play with me again."

Dick glanced at her compassionately, and once more drew the chain from his pocket.

"Come, little one, don't cry," he said, gently. "Look, here's the pretty chain for you. Cheer up, and be a brave little maid."

But she only shook her head, and bent sobbing over the dead kitten. He patted her on the shoulder with rough kindness, put the chain on the ground beside her, and mounting his horse rode away. The rest of the troopers, having found no trace of the fugitive, were already some distance ahead.

As soon as he was convinced that they were out of sigh, Walter scrambled down from the niche to comfort the child, who was still sobbing over the body of her little playmate. But she refused to be comforted, and, regarding him as the cause of the kitten's death, repulsed his awkward attempts at consolation with angry impatience.

"Ah, well," said he, "perhaps you'll forgive me in time, Jessie. You're a brave little maid, and I'll never forget that you saved my life this day. You and I will be good friends yet."

To judge from the imperious manner in which she ordered him to go away, she quite declined to share this hopeful view of their future relations; but when he returned from France ten manned and fed by himself. He had so crippled the naval power of his enemies that there was now no hostile fleet strong enough to prevent his present undertaking, although Philip had managed to send out some scores of cruisers to do whatever harm they could.

Shattered Nerves.

THE MOST PREVALENT TROUBLE OF THE CENTURY.

It attacks People of Both Sexes and All Ages—A Complete Breakdown Follows Unless Prompt Measures For Relief Are Taken.

From the Newmarket Era.

Probably the most prevalent trouble on this continent to-day is nervous prostration. How frequently we hear this term and yet how few appear to realize its full deadly import. Nervous prostration is to be found among people of all walks in life, and among children as well as adults. Among young people it is often the result of our high pressure system of education. Among those of more mature years it may be due to the cares of business, or to overwork, or worries in the home. But whatever the cause the inevitable result is a breaking down both mentally and physicially unless prompt measures are taken to stay the ravages of the disease and restore the shattered nerve forces to their normal condition. One such sufferer who has regained health gives her experience for the benefit of those less fortunate. Miss Edith Draper who resides with her parents at Belhaven, Ont., is a young lady who is very popular among her circle of acquaintances, and they all rejoice at her restoration to health. To a reporter who called upon her she gave the following particulars concerning her illness and cure. "You know," said the young lady, "how ill I was last winter when my friends feared that I was going into a decline. In the early part of the winter both father and mother were attacked with la grippe, and I had to look after them as well as attend to the household work. The strain was more than I could stand, and the result was I fell ill. The doctor who was called in said my trouble was nervous prostration and that it would take considerable time for me to recover. Under his care I was after a short while able to leave my room and go about the house, but my nerves did not seem to regain their strength. My limbs would twitch as though I had St. Vitus' dance, I was subject to headaches, had a very poor appetite and was so weak that I could scarcely go about. I had been advised to try Pink Pills and one day spoke to the doctor about them, and he said he believed they would do me good. I got three boxes, and by the time I had used them I felt they were helping me and I got a further supply. By the time I had taken six boxes I was feeling stronger and better than I had for years. All the twitching in my limbs had disappeared, and my nerves seemed as strong as ever they had been. I still took the pills for a little while longer to make certain that the cure was complete, and since the day I discontinued them I have not felt the slightest return of the trouble. I feel that my present excellent health is due to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I am glad to be able to recommend them to any one whose nerves are in a shattered condition.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a tonic medicine. By their use the blood is renewed, and the nerves made strong and vigorous, and in this way disease is driven from the system. As a spring medicine Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are unsurpassed. If feeling languid or "out-of-sorts" a box or two will restore you to vigorous activity. Ask for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and take nothing else.

Reflections of a Bachelor.

The only kind of love that you can't find is the incurable kind.

Very few men have the strength of mind not to insinuate to a girl that they always carry a pistol.

If the women could have their way, probably all the men's trousers would have white pearl buttons on them.

The average woman never gets an idea that she has a lot of trials till she gets into the habit of talking about them in prayer meeting.

A woman can never forgive her husband for coming home early the night she has decided to sit up and wait for him if it's till morning.

It is one of the saddest ironies of life that a man would a lot rather have a girl give him some new red flannel underclothes than a cut glass ash tray, but he never dares say so.—New York Press.

The White Man's Engine.

This is how a native of Bulawayo describes a railway engine: It's a huge animal belonging to the white man. It has only one eye (the head lamp). It feeds on fire and hates work. When the white man pumps it, to make it work, it screams. It comes from somewhere, but no one knows from whence.—New York Tribune.

NEWS OF VICTORY

James Thompson Cured of Diabetes by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Dodd's Kidney Pills Have Many Startling Cures to their Credit in Bruce County—No Medicine Made Can Approach Them.

PAISLEY, JAN. 31st.—A marked peculiarity of the people of Bruce County is their firm belief in Dodd's Kidney Pills, as a sure cure for Bright's Disease, Diabetes, and all other Kidney troubles.

So many remarkable cures have been made by Dodd's Kidney Pills, in this county that the people's confidence in them is only natural.

One of those who have been rescued by Dodd's Kidney Pills, is James Thompson, of Paisley. He suffered for years with "an extreme case of Diabetes," and was so bad he could hardly move. Almost every medicine on the market was tried, without effect. Then he tried Dodd's Kidney Pills. His recovery began at that time. Now he is fully restored to health.

Mr. Thompson is only one of many thousands who have been cured of Kidney Diseases, by Dodd's Kidney Pills. The simple, undeniable truth is that every person who has used them for any of these diseases has been thoroughly and permanently cured. This can not be said, truthfully, of any other medicine that has ever been used. Dodd's Kidney Pills stand alone, in proud position far above any rivals.

Dodd's Kidney Pills ALWAYS CURE Rheumatism, Lame Back, Lumbago, Gout, Dropsy, Heart Disease, Female Weakness, Gravel, Stone in Bladder, Sciatica, Neuralgia, and all impurities of the blood. They are the only medicine on earth that will positively cure Bright's Disease and Diabetes. Dodd's Kidney Pills are sold by all druggists, at 50 cents a box, six boxes for $2.50, or will be sent on receipt of price, by the Dodd's Medicine Co., Limited, Toronto.

"I was all run down with complaints peculiar to my sex, and I broke out in sores on my body, head, limbs and hands, and my hair all came out. I was under the doctor's treatment a long time without benefit. They called my trouble eczema. Finally I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and after I had used three or four bottles I found I was improving. I kept on until I had taken several more bottles and the sores and itching have disappeared and my hair has grown out." MRS. J. G. BROWN, Brantford, Ontario.

"I was all run down and had no appetite. I had a tired feeling all the time. I was advised to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. I did so and it benefited me so much that I would not be without it." MRS. G. I. BURNETT, Central Norton, N. B.

A COLLEGE GIRL.

Cornelia Burt walked slowly into the reading room and sat down at the long table covered with blue-prints. She sat down and took up a book filled with "sample copies," but she did not turn the leaves. She looked about the room, at the long green tables covered with daily papers, at the divans around the walls, at the great fireplace and the scattered groups of girls. As she looked her eyes filled with tears, and unconsciously she lifted her hand and wiped them away.

A pretty little freshman, who never looked anywhere but in Cornelia Burt's direction when that handsome and prominent junior was visible, stared harder than ever, and whispered to her roommate, "Miss Burt's crying!"

"Nonsense!" said the room-mate, addressing, abstractedly, "but the line A B is equal to the line C D, and therefore—the lecture—why, what if she is? I suppose she can cry if she likes?"

"Yes," said the freshman, meekly, "of course. But she must feel pretty bad to cry here in the reading-room. And I never thought Cornelia Burt cried, anyhow. I wish I could—I wish I knew her better—"

"You are absurd," said the room-mate, "and you know it. Anybody would think you never looked at anyone but Cornelia Burt. I don't believe she's crying, either. What should she have to cry for? She's too conceited to cry—"

But the look in the freshman's eyes stopped her. "She is conceited, you know perfectly well that she is," she reiterated feebly from behind her geometry.

"She is not in the least conceited," returned the freshman, coldly. "She is the most brilliant girl in her class and everyone knows it. She has a right to look proud if she likes, and if she looks bored most of the time, which is what makes the girls angry, it is because she can't help it if we were more interesting she wouldn't look so bored."

The room-mate dropped her book in her lap and stared for a moment in silence. Then, as the gong struck the hour, she shook out her skirts and picked up her books. "I would advise you, my child," she said, sweetly, "not to show so much disgust when Teddy Carroll tells us that it's the greatest delight of her life to buy violets for Lena St. John if you're getting there fast! But you have my sympathy—for I doubt if you could interest her majesty, you know!"

But it was true, Cornelia Burt was crying, and no one could be more surprised at that fact than she. Through a mist of tears she looked at the familiar faces in the blue-print book—the faculty, curiously labeled: "Miss Brown, with shawl;" "Miss Williams, on steps;" the students, in every conceivable position and combination: "J. Reading, smile;" "Lucia, banjo;" "Cora Willis, Lou Harris and J. Peterson, in hammock;" "The President, with dog." She had laughed at them all—now she was going to leave them. She had never bought blue prints; she had no memorabilia. Now she would like some, but it was too late. If she had money to pay her bills she was fortunate, Cornelia thought bitterly.

Some one was practicing on the big organ in the chapel overhead. The queer, wheezing piston on the reading ing the Little Abyssinia Coon, and the observatory a few energetic seniors were trying to organize a universal "sing."

Cornelia felt a sudden longing to be with them all, to be close to her classmates, and at the same time she dreaded having to talk to them. She slipped behind the trees to a vacant hammock, and sat slowly swinging to and fro. All about her floated fragments of conversation, and idly she tried to guess the speakers from their voices.

"So I said that I'd have him up for the prom., but it seems that Kitty has asked him already—horrid, wasn't it? I hate to ask a man—"

"I'd just read eight pages of Freytag, and I was as cross as a bear. I said: 'I'm not prepared,' and I don't care what he thought—"

"Mary looked perfectly stunning! She carries herself so well, too. But I don't see how she does so much. She says she never gets to bed till eleven—"

"Oh, as for Katherine, she's too far gone for any use; she can't speak of anybody but Cornelia Burt. And I don't believe that Miss Burt knows who she is, do you?"

"Well, good night. I must do a little philosophy, or I shall be expelled. Think how embarrassing that would be!"

"Good night!" and a girl in pale-blue dimity that rustled crisply as she walked, left the departing philosopher and strolled over to Cornelia's hammock, stopping when she saw its occupant.

"Oh, don't go away," entreated Miss Burt. "Please come back! I was just going. Is this your hammock?" Then she saw that the girl was Clara Williston.

"I'll come," said Miss Williston, "only on condition that you don't go. Otherwise, I go immediately. She waited a moment, and then sat beside Cornelia. "I hope I shan't bore you to death," she said.

Cornelia did not answer, but pulled her skirt aside as Miss Williston sat down. It occurred to her that very probably Clara Williston would spend more money for her commencement gown than she would need to finish her senior year!

"I want to tell you how much I enjoyed your story in the magazine," said Miss Williston. "I don't see how you can think of such queer, exciting things. Really, I got quite worked up over it! I hope now you're editor, you won't stop writing."

Cornelia never quite knew why it was that she did not make some conventional reply, and then go. She barely knew Miss Williston, and she was a girl who said very little of her own affairs to anyone, even the people she knew best. But to her own surprise, she looked over the campus, and said, easily: "I'm afraid I shall do very little writing, editorial or otherwise. I shall probably not be here next year."

"Not be here! Why, Miss Burt, what do you mean? Surely you're not going to leave the senior year? Truly, it's the very best of all! And what would the class do without you?"

Cornelia smiled. "I fear you over-estimate my importance," she said. "I have always pitied the poor alumnae, who had practically carried the college with them when they were here, and who are really forgotten by the next class but one. One doesn't count for much unless one's on deck all the time! And I don't doubt that the senior year is very pleasant, Miss Williston. But—"

"But, Miss Burt, it's dreadful! Why, the class—do they know it?"

"No," said Cornelia; "I haven't told anybody yet. I'm sure I don't know why I should tell you. Don't think of it. I'm here now, at all events. So you like the senior year the best? Kate Dickinson always said—"

"I don't care what she said," said Miss Williston with a decision that annoyed the junior. "I want to talk about you. Now don't look haughty, Miss Burt, please. I simply must. You mustn't think me rude, will you? Because I don't mean to be. But—is it money?"

"Yes," said Cornelia, "it's money." And then with a bitter little laugh she folded her hands on her lap and looked at Miss Williston. "I suppose you can't understand how $500 can be an impossibility, can you?"

She turned her head away, and talked low, as if to herself. Miss Williston listened with hushed breath, fearing to lose a word.

"You see," said she, quickly, "it's all up with the family. They've kept it from me because I hate money matters. I don't understand them. And they thought they could get me through. But they can't. So I'm just going home. I can't teach—I loathe it. Besides, I haven't studied anything with a view to teaching. Oh, why," and she turned and stared at the senior as if just conscious of what she was saying, "why do I tell this to you? I must be crazy. I—"

"Because," said Clara Williston, quietly, "because I am just the one to tell

—yes, the place she loved! Across the campus came a row of seniors, arms twined about each other, eight abreast:

Where, oh, where are the grave old seniors?
Where, oh, where are the grave old seniors?
Where, oh, where are the grave old seniors?
Safe, now, in the wide, wide world!

There was a sad little ring to the old tune, and Cornelia wondered if they were sorry.

FATHER AND CHILD.

I left her in the dark to find
Her own way home; she had no fear.
I followed noiselessly behind;
She never dreamed that I was near.
I let her have her childish will;
But had she cried, why, in a wink!—
That would have seemed a miracle,
So in our little life, I think.

THE MOON AND I.

A golden moon that leans her gentle face
On the blue darkness of the summer sky—
We watched her steal aloft a little space,
My love and I.

Parting the opal clouds, upward she rose
To wander lonely mid the stars on high.
We thought our world as bright as one of those,
My love and I.

Dear love, the moonlight smote your rippling hair
And made you smile you knew not how nor why.
My heart beat strangely as we lingered there,
My love and I.

I asked her, fooled by the bewildering light,
If she would try to love me by and by.
She rose and left me. I stood in the night,
The moon and I.

Tertullian, the great Christian historian, who lived two hundred years after Christ, says in Book V., of his Apologia:

"Peter persuaded Tiberius to place the report of Pilate in the Royal Archives, where it was preserved."

Biblical scholars have for centuries searched for this report. The Rev. Dr. W. D. Mahan, an English clergyman and paleographer, has brought to light an ancient Latin manuscript in the library of the Vatican at Rome, which purports to be the missing document.

If the Rev. Dr. Mahan proves to be right it is the most marvelously interesting discovery in many centuries. It reveals the astonishing fact that the Saviour would not have been crucified if Pontius Pilate had had enough soldiers to subdue the Jewish mob—if, in fact, the reinforcements of the Roman commander that arrived the very next day had come one day sooner, Pilate would have rescued the Saviour and prevented the crucifixion.

Pilate, in his report of the disturbances in the provinces of Judea, tells his emperor, Tiberius Caesar, of a private personal interview he had with Christ, which gives a new and entrancing vision of the Saviour in the presence of the Roman Governor. The report of Pilate is given in full below, and is, indeed, if authentic, "the most marvelous and extraordinary discovery of years."

Pontius Pilate's Report.

"To Tiberius Caesar, Emperor:

"Noble sovereign, greeting: The events of the last few days in my province have been of such a character that I thought well to report the details as they have occurred, as I should not be surprised if in course of time they may change the destiny of our nation; for it seems of late that the gods have ceased to be propitious. I am almost ready to room wall heaved up and down to the Dutch fugue that repeated its doleful minors again and again. It was warm, warm with the delicious, drowsy heat of the young spring term—the beautiful spring term with the long, hazy evenings on the hundred hammocks. And this would be her last spring term.

Somehow it was harder to go than she could have dreamed, last year. To go out in good order as a senior, with four years behind her, to get once more the admiration and pride in her that her class always felt when she had distinguished herself, and then to leave the whole thing finished, completed, and start out prepared for the larger life—that would not be so hard. All would feel alike, then. But to go as a junior, with all the things undone that she had meant to do, to leave to another editor the college paper which she had meant to manage so well, to lose the senior dramatics she had planned to enjoy so much—oh, it was hard! And all for the lack of a few pitiful hundred dollars!

She got up abruptly and left the room. As she passed through the hall, not looking at the large crowded bulletin-boards that lined the walls, someone called her name. "Excuse me, Miss Burt, but there's a note on the board for you."

Cornelia looked up in some surprise on Clara Williston, a rich, rather dull girl, whom she hardly knew. "Thank you," she said, with a somewhat cool nod. Miss Williston thought. "I'll get it."

She opened the half-sheet of note-paper and glanced at it, her eyes were so blurred with tears:

Dear Nene: Of course you remember our dance is to-morrow night. I've got you as good an order as I possibly could, and may I have the second extra? As ever, SUE.

How she had laughed at the dances and said they bored her, once! But they seemed the very essence of pleasure and love and music and light now.

She walked home and changed her serge skirt and shirt-waist for a pretty light gown, open at the neck. She put on her rings, all of them, and went to supper. Although off the campus, the house where she lived was a popular one.

Never had she talked so brilliantly. Story after story she told the 20 girls at the table, till the room rang with laughter. She scowled and coughed and mimicked the dark professor, she simpered and smiled and affected the graces of the light one. More than one of her flashes of wit, her delicious paradoxes, her apt comparisons went the rounds of the class-room for weeks afterward.

When she left the table they crowded around her and followed her to the gate, wrapping her in that delicious atmosphere of admiring interest and affectionate appreciation that only a crowd of college girls can give their idol of the hour.

"Where are you going, Miss Burt? Have you got to go? Won't you come down and have an ice with us?"

Cornelia smiled; the excitement of the supper table flushed her cheeks. "Thank you, but I have an engagement with Miss Leeds," she said.

"Oh, how interesting it must be to know the faculty!" gushed the sophomore with the pretty clothes. "But then, I suppose they're glad enough in your case! I should be so scared, I shouldn't dare to speak to them!"

Cornelia smiled back at them. "You silly things!" she said; "they're very like other people; sometimes they're more so!" And she left them, laughing, at the gate.

She could not study, and even the classic engagement with Miss Leeds seemed impossible to her. She strolled through the gate and went slowly to the campus. Already it was covered with light dresses, and the soft tinkle of mandolins came from among the trees. One of the Glee-Club girls were singing it to. Do you mean to say, Miss Burt, that for the lack of $500 you are going to lose your last year?—for that, and nothing else?"

"Yes," said Cornelia, dominated utterly by this rich nobody; "yes, just that."

"Then," said Miss Williston, "then I say that it is absurd, and that you shan't do it. I can do very little at college, but I can—"

"My dear Miss Williston," said Cornelia, icily, "I do not in the least understand you. I hardly know you, and—"

"Oh, but you do understand me; you must—you shall!" cried Miss Williston, and Cornelia saw she was flushed, and that her eyes shone like stars. "Listen to me! I have—O Miss Burt, when I think of how little it would mean to me and how much to you! Please, please do it! Just think, only $500! I have $2000 a year. I am ashamed of it, truly I am, but I have it for what I please—just exactly what I please. No, you shan't get up yet. See, see how it is with me! All my four years here, What have I done? Nothing. I've got through well enough, but that's all. I've made some friends, but not many. The only two girls I ever loved here were very poor, and they were awfully proud, and they were afraid that because I was the richest girl in college—oh, it was dreadful! And I shall go and leave nothing behind me—nothing! If I could feel that I had given you to your class—to the college—for a year, I should be so happy! I should even think that I was of some use! Oh, let me! Let me feel that I've really done something!"

Cornelia looked at her curiously. She was almost in tears. Her hands held Cornelia's tightly, and she was evidently deeply in earnest.

"It would mean so little to me—so little!" she begged. "And yet it would be so much for the class! And they would never know—never would know; but I should know, and I should know that I've done something for them, and that I wasn't just one of those poor, useless girls that drift into the college and then drift out again, and don't count—either way!"

Cornelia felt deeply touched. "Why, how you care!" she said, wonderingly; "how you care!"

Miss Williston drew a long, tremendous breath. "Care!" she cried; "you don't know how we care, we poor mediocre ones! Do you think that because we couldn't write a poem to save our lives, and can't make original remarks in class, and are never proposed for office, and don't, for the best of reasons, edit the paper, that we don't want to do these things? Oh, if I could only have my father hear the things said about me which are said of you every day! If I could only feel that I was to the class what you are!"

"The class don't like me," said Cornelia, abruptly.

"They admire you, and if you wanted to you could be liked very, very much, indeed," said Miss Williston. "I always thought that you didn't care to have us like you!"

There was a pause. The girls were drifting back to the houses, one by one. The stars were well out, and Miss Williston's face seemed white, now, in their light.

"Do you really care for the things they say about one here?" asked Cornelia.

"Care?" said Miss Williston again; "of course I care. So do you. But you don't need them. You're sure of them. You know what you can do. And through you I can do the only thing I ever could do—and I go in June. O, Miss Burt, only $500! I could put it in the bank to you're account and that would be the end of it. And you could pay me back whenever you pleased, if you wanted to. For I suppose you wouldn't let me—"

"No," said Cornelia, "I wouldn't. An hour ago I should have said that the whole thing was impossible."

"But now," said Miss Williston, quickly: "but now?"

"But now?" said Cornelia, slowly; "now—oh, never say again that you are one of the 'mediocre ones!' No one could make so disagreeable and proud a girl as I accept a kindness from a stranger as gratefully as I do from you—"

But she did not finish, for Miss Williston leaned towards her and kissed her.

"I thank you," she said, simply; "now I can hold up my head again. I have done something for my college! I am something more than 'Clara Williston, the well-dressed girl!'" And before Cornelia could reply, she had slipped away.

Cornelia lay back in the hammock and looked at the stars. A strange peace came to her, and she realized for the first time how happy she had been. Slowly the great bell struck eight. The light came up in the great shadowy buildings. Only the seniors and a few lazy underclass girls filled the hammocks around her. "I live here! This is where I belong!" she thought, happily, and smiled to herself.

A year more to work and plan and get Tupinambras of the Brazilian pampas, the gamins of the Paris streets, the boys and girls of London, of Boston and of Philadelphia, have one kindred tie—the love of sport. There is nothing new under the sun, said the wise man, and especially is there nothing new in youthful games.

Archæologists have found dolls in Egyptian pyramids and on prehistoric tombs; the name of a popular ball club was found scrawled upon the outer walls of Pompeiian houses, and one of the most exciting matches on record was the one stubbornly fought between the rival nines of Montezuma, king of Mexico, and Nezahual-pilli, tzin of Tezcuco.

The boys of ancient Greece and Rome played at whip top, and quoits, and baseball, and pitch penny, and blindman's buff, and hide and seek, and jackstones, and follow my leader, just as do the boys of today. The girls were experts at seesaw, and at singing, and dancing, and grace hoops, and dice throwing, and ball play, and, in Sparta, even at running, wrestling and leaping. Tobogganing is as old as ice and snow, and when you play at cherry pits you are only doing what Nero and Commodus and young Themistocles did ages ago in Rome and in Athens.

So, whatever the age or whatever the clime, boys and girls of the world have always lived more for play than for anything else, and however harsh or hard their surroundings, however stern or strict their fathers and their mothers, they always found and always made the most of the time for play.

Said a critic recently on the subject of recreation, "The sports of the day are fast reducing themselves into so many sciences, overweighted with rules and restrictions that often take the real play element from them and make them as unyielding as a problem in algebra."

There is no fun in making our sport a matter of life and death. I know growing people who in these days of prize giving in all manner of games center their whole desires not on the fun of the game, but on the prizes offered. They really seem as much disappointed if they do not carry off a trophy as if they had met with some serious loss. Let us take our fun with a jollity or not at all. Interest is one thing and irritability is quite another.

We have only to watch the intense excitement of some of the amateur players in popular games to realize that the critic was right about that algebra problem. The complaint of "unfairness" on one side and of disagreeable triumph on another seem to be the most noticeable features at the close of the sports of today, and we cannot help wondering if this was a feature of the games of olden times or if in this respect the young people of the present really have "something new."—Philadelphia Times.

to be propitious. I am almost ready to say, 'Cursed be the day that I succeeded Valerius Gratus in the government of Judea.'

"On my arrival at Jerusalem I took possession of the Judgment Hall, and ordered a splendid feast to be prepared, to which I invited the Tetrarch of Galilee, with the High Priest and his officers. At the appointed hour no guests appeared. This was an insult offered to my dignity. A few days after the High Priest deigned to pay me a visit. His deportment was grave and deceitful. He pretended that his religion forbade him and his attendants to sit down at the table of Romans and to offer up libations with them. I thought it expedient to accept of his excuse, but from that moment I was convinced that the conquered had declared themselves the enemies of the conquerors. It seems to me that of all conquered cities Jerusalem is the most difficult to govern!

"So turbulent were the people that I lived in momentary dread of an insurrection. To repress it I had but a single centurion and a handful of soldiers. I requested a reinforcement from the Governor of Syria, who informed me that he had scarcely troops sufficient to defend his own province. An insatiate thirst for conquest—to extend our empire beyond the means of defending it—I fear will be the means of overthrowing our noble government.

"Among the various rumors that came to my ears there was one that attracted my attention in particular. A young man, it was said, had appeared in Galilee, preaching with a noble unction a new law, in the name of the gods that had sent him. At first I was apprehensive, that his design was to stir up the people against the Romans, but soon were my fears dispelled. Jesus of Nazareth spake rather as a friend of the Romans than of the Jews. One day, in passing by the Palace of Siloe, where there was a great concourse of people, I observed in the midst of the group a young man, who was leaning against a tree calmly addressing a multitude. I was told that this was Jesus. This I could easily have expected, so great was the difference between him and those who were listening to him. His golden colored hair and beard gave to his appearance a celestial aspect. He appeared to be about thirty years of age. Never have I seen a sweeter or more serene countenance. What a contrast between him and his hearers, with their black beards and tawny complexions!

"Unwilling to interrupt him by my presence, I continued my walk, but signified to my secretary to join the group and listen. My secretary's name is Manlius. He is the grandson of the chief of the conspirators who encamped in Etruria, awaiting Cataline. Manlius was anciently an inhabitant of Judea, and well acquainted with the Hebrew language. He is devoted to me and worthy of my confidence. On entering the Judgment Hall I found Manlius, who related to me the words of Jesus had pronounced at Siloe. Never have I heard in the Portico, nor in the works of the philosophers, anything that can compare to the maxims of Jesus. One of the rebellious Jews—so numerous in Jerusalem—having asked him if it was lawful to give tribute to Caesar, Jesus replied: 'Render unto Caesar the things which belong to Caesar, and unto God the things that are God's.' It was on account of the wisdom of his sayings that I granted so much liberty to the Nazarene, for it was in my power to have had him arrested and exiled to Pontus; but this would have been contrary to the justice which has always characterized the Romans. This man was neither seditious nor rebellious, and I extended to him my protection, unknown perhaps to himself.

"He was at liberty to act, to speak, to assemble and address the people, to choose disciples, unrestrained by any Pretorian mandate. Should it ever happen—may the gods ever avert the omen—should it ever happen, I say, that the religion of our forefathers be supplanted by the religion of Jesus, it will be to this noble toleration that Rome shall owe her premature obsequies, while I, miserable wretch, shall have been the instrument of what Christians call Providence, and we, destiny. But this unlimited freedom granted Jesus provoked the Jews; not the poor, but the rich and powerful. It is true that Jesus was severe on the latter, and this was a political reason, in my opinion, not to control the liberty of the Nazarene. 'Scribes and Pharisees,' he would say to them, 'you are a race of vipers; you resemble painted sepulchres.' At other times he would sneer at the proud alms of the publican, telling him that the mite of the widow was more precious in the sight of God.

"New complaints were daily made at the Judgment Hall against the insolence of the Jews. I was even informed that some misfortune would befall him—that it would not be the first time that Jerusalem had stoned those who called themselves prophets—and if the Pretorium refused justice, an appeal would be made to Caesar. However, my conduct was approved by the senate, and I was promised a reinforcement after the termination of the Parthian war. Being too weak to suppress a sedition, I resolved upon adopting a measure that promised to establish the tranquility of the city without subjecting the Pretorium to the humiliating concessions.

"I wrote to Jesus requesting an interview with him at the Judgment Hall in your discourses. Do not infringe. My orders you know. May happiness attend you. Farewell."

"'Prince of the earth,' replied Jesus, 'I came not to bring war into the world, but peace, love and charity. I was born the same day on which Augustus Caesar gave peace to the Roman world. Persecution proceeds not from me. I expect it from others, and will meet it in obedience to the will of my Father, Who has shown me the way. Restrain, therefore, your worldly prudence. It is not in your power to arrest the victim at the foot of the altar of expiation.'

"So saying, he disappeared like a bright shadow behind the curtains of the palace.

"To Herod, who then reigned in Galilee, the enemies of Jesus addressed themselves to wreak their vengeance on the Nazarene. Had Herod consulted his own inclination, he would have ordered Jesus immediately put to death; but though proud of his royal dignity, yet he was afraid of committing an act that might diminish his influence with the senate. Herod called on me one day at the Pretorium, and, on rising to take leave, after some insignificant conversation, he asked my opinion concerning the Nazarine. I replied that Jesus appeared to be one of those great philosophers that great nations sometimes produce, that his doctrines were by no means sacrilegious and that the intention of Rome was to leave him to that freedom of speech which was justified by his actions. Herod smiled and saluting me with ironical respect he departed.

"The great feast of the Jews was approaching, and the intention of their religious rulers was to avail themselves of the popular exultation which always manifests itself at the solemnities of a Passover. The city was overflowing with a tumultuous populace clamoring for the death of the Nazarene. My emissaries informed me that the treasure of the temple had been employed in bribing the people. The danger was pressing. A Roman centurion had been insulted. I wrote to the Prefect of Syria for a hundred foot soldiers and as many cavalry. He declined. I saw myself alone, with a handful of veterans, in the midst of a rebellious city, too weak to suppress a disorder, and having no other choice left but to tolerate it. The seditious rabble had seized Jesus, and although they felt that they had nothing to fear from the Pretorium, believing with their leaders that I winked at their sedition, continued vociferating, 'Crucify him! Crucify him!'

"Three powerful parties had combined together at that time against Jesus. First, the Herodians, and the Sadducees, whose seditious conduct seems to have proceeded from double motives: they hated the Nazarene, and were impatient of the Roman yoke. Priest, performed a derisory act of submission. He sent his prisoner to me to pronounce his condemnation. I answered him that, as Jesus was a Galilean, the affair came under Herod's jurisdiction; and I ordered him to be sent thither. That wily tetrarch professed his humility, and protesting his deference to me, the lieutenant of Caesar, recommitted the fate of the man to my hands.

"Soon my palace assumed the aspect of a besieged citadel. Every moment increased the number of seditionists. Jerusalem was inundated with crowds from the mountains of Nazareth. All Judea appeared to be pouring into the devoted city.

"I had taken a wife—a maiden from among the Gauls—who pretended to see into futurity. She, weeping, and throwing herself at my feet, said to me:

"'Beware, and touch not that man, for he is holy. Last night I saw him in a vision. He was walking on the waters. He was flying on the wings of the wind. He spoke to the tempest and to the fishes of the lake—all were obedient to him. Behold! the torrent of Mount Kedron flows with blood! The statues of Caesar are filled with the filth of Gemonide! The columns of the Interium have given away, and the sun is veiled in mourning, like a vestal of the tomb! O Pilate! evil awaits thee, if thou wilt not listen to the entreaties of thy wife. Dread the curse of a Roman senate; dread the powers of Caesar.'

"By this time the marble stairs groaned under the weight of the multitude. The Nazarene was brought back to me. I proceeded to the Hall of Justice, followed by my guard, and asked the people in a severe tone what they demanded. 'The death of the Nazarene,' was the reply. 'For what crime?' 'He has blasphemed. He has prophesied the ruin of the temple. He called himself the Son of God, the Messiah, the King of the Jews.' 'Roman justice,' said I, 'punishes not such offences with death.'

"'Crucify him, crucify him!' belched forth the relentless rabble. The vociferation of the infuriated mob shook the palace to its foundations. There was but one that appeared to be calm in the midst of the vast multitude. It was the Nazarene.

"After many fruitless attempts to protect him from this fury of his merciless persecutors, I adopted a measure which, at the moment, appeared to me to be the only one that could save him life. I ordered him to be scourged; then, calling for an ewer, I washed my hands in the presence of the multitude, thereby signifying to them my disapproval of the deed. But in vain. It was His life that those wretches thirsted for!

"Often in our civil commotions have I witnessed the furious animosity of the multitude, but nothing could be compared to what I witnessed in the present instance. It might have been truly said that on this occasion all the phantoms of the infernal regions had assembled at Jerusalem. The crowd appeared not to walk; they were borne along, whirling and rolling like living waves, from the portals of the Pretorium, even unto Mount Zion, with howlings, screams, shrieks and vociferations such as were never heard in the seditions of the Panonia or in the tumult of the Forum.

"By degrees the day darkened like a winter's twilight, such as was witnessed at the death of the great Julius Caesar, which was likewise towards the Ides of March.

"I, the continued Governor of a rebellious province, was leaning against a column of my palace contemplating through the dreary gloom those fiends of torture dragging to execution the innocent Nazarene. All around me was deserted. Jerusalem had vomited forth her indwellers through the funeral gate that leads to the Germonica. An air of desolation and sadness enveloped me. My guards had joined the cavalry, and the centurion, to display a shadow of power, was endeavoring to keep order.

"I was left alone, and my breaking heart admonished me that what was passing at that moment appertained rather to the history of the gods than to that of a man. A loud clamor was heard proceeding from Golgotha; which, borne on the winds, seemed to announce an agony such as had never been heard by mortal ears. Dark clouds lowered over the pinnacle of the temple; and, settling over the city, covered it as with a veil. So dreadful were the signs that were seen, both in the heavens and on the earth, that Dionysius, the Areopagite, is reported to have exclaimed, 'Either the Author of Nature is suffering or the universe is falling apart.'

"Towards the first hour of the night, as I was climbing the stairs of the Pretorium—the steps of which were still stained with the blood of the Nazarene—I perceived an old man in supplant posture, and behind him several women in tears. He threw himself at my feet and wept bitterly. It is painful to see an old man weep.

"'Father,' said I to him mildly, 'who are you, and what is your request?'

"'I am Joseph of Arimathea,' replied he, 'and am come to beg of you upon

"There is so much trouble coming into the world," said Lord Bolingbroke, "and so much more is going out of it, that it is hardly worth while to be here at all." If a man and a philosopher comes to this conclusion, what must be the natural conclusion of the thousands of suffering women who undergo untold torture in bringing their babes into the world?

Philosophy of this kind is based upon gross ignorance. The fact is, that there is no necessity for the severe pangs undergone by the average woman. If a woman is strong and healthy in a womanly way, motherhood means to her but little suffering. The trouble lies in the fact that the majority of women suffer from weakness and disease of the distinctly feminine organism and are unfitted for motherhood. This can always be remedied. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a sure, speedy and permanent cure for all disorders of this description. It acts directly on the delicate and important organs concerned, making them healthy, strong, vigorous, virile and elastic. It banishes the indispositions of the period of expectancy and makes baby's advent easy and almost painless. It quickens and vitalizes the feminine organs, and insures a healthy and robust baby. Thousands of women have testified to its marvelous merits. Honest druggists do not offer substitutes, and urge them upon you as "just as good."

"I suffered fourteen years," writes Mrs. Mary J. Stewart, of Box 46, Saratoga, Santa Clara Co., Cal., with female weakness, nervousness and general debility. I tried everything to no avail. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Medical Discovery' cured me."

The names, addresses and photographs of hundreds of women cured by Dr. Pierce's medicines are printed by permission in the "People's Common Sense Medical Adviser." It's free. HABITS OF WILD TURKEYS.

Practical Hints to Hunters About the "Wit of the Woods."

Indians call the wild turkey the "wit of the woods." It is the most difficult of game to approach. The most scientific method of killing it is by calling—imitating its cry. This is most efficacious in the spring, when the gobblers call to the hens incessantly in the early morning and at intervals all through the day. The sound may be either a love note or a challenge to a male. In either case, if well done by the hunter, it will prove effective in bringing the bird near its hidden foe.

The best turkey call is made of the wing bone. Sometimes it consists only of a bit of slate and a smoothed twig. The twig when drawn across the slate gives a wonderful imitation of the bird's "cheep." To call successfully requires long practice. Some men become so expert that they need only a broad leaf held between the thumbs and applied to the lips. The "challenge call" is made in this way.

The gobbler tries hard to prevent the hen nesting. He wants all of her time and attention. He must have an audience for his strutting. After many attempts to escape and more than one beating she will suddenly go violently lame, with a broken wing and a queer leg. This is a favorite trick of gallinaceous females. The quail does it often to lure marauders from her young. The gobbler has no use at all for a lame wife. After prancing around her for a little while and savagely striking her with his wing he hies himself away into deepest woods, heart whole and happy.

His patient spouse then makes her nest in peace. Her foes are active, and she heeds all of her wonderful power of secretiveness. Crows and snakes are fond of her eggs. The crow, if he discovers the nest, will wait until the mother vacates it in search of water and food and then carry away the eggs one at a time. While nesting the hens many times fall victims to foxes, wild cats, leopard cats, lynxes or coyotes.

The brood when hatched must be guarded first of all from the parent gobbler. If he finds it, he will decapitate the chicks one after another with his strong beak. This is jealousy. Caught in an open space by a hovering hawk the chicks, at the sound of a peculiar cluck, will stretch themselves upon the ground as if dead, while the mother flees to the undergrowth. The hawk will not eat flesh that he thinks

"I wrote to Jesus requesting an interview with him at the Judgment Hall, and he came. You know that in my veins flows the Spanish mixed with the Roman blood, as incapable of fear as it is of puerile emotions.

"When the Nazarene made his appearance I was walking in my court, and my feet seemed fastened with an iron hand to the marble pavement, and I trembled in every limb as a guilty culprit, though he was calm—the Nazarene—calm as innocence. When he came up to me he stopped, and, by a signal, seemed to say to me, 'I am here.' For some time I contemplated this extraordinary type of man—a type of man unknown to our numerous painters, who have given form and figure to all the gods and heroes.

"'Jesus,' said I to him at last, and my tongue faltered, 'Jesus of Nazareth, I have granted you for the last three years ample freedom of speech; nor do I regret it. Your words are those of a sage. I know not whether you have read Socrates or Plato; but this I know—that there is in your discourses a majestic simplicity that elevates you far above those philosophers. The Emperor is informed of it, and I, his humble representative in this community, am glad of having allowed you that liberty of which you are so worthy.'

"'However, I must not conceal from you the fact that your discourses have raised up against you powerful and inveterate enemies. Neither is this surprising. Socrates had his enemies and he fell a victim to their hatred. Yours are doubly incensed against you on account of your sayings, and against me on account of the liberty extended toward you. They even accuse me of being indirectly leagued with you for the purpose of depriving the Hebrews of the little civil power which Rome has left them. My request—I do not say my order—is, that you be more circumspect in the future and more tender in arousing the pride of your enemies, lest they raise against you the stupid populace and compel me to employ the instruments of justice.'

"The Nazarene calmly replied:

"'Prince of the earth, your words proceed not from true wisdom. Say to the torrent, stop in the midst of the mountain home! because it will uproot the trees of the valley. The torrent will answer you that it must obey the laws of the Creator. God alone knows whither flows the torrent. Verily I say unto you, before the Rose of Sharon blossoms the blood of the just shall be spilt.'

"'Your blood shall not be spilt,' replied I with emotion. 'You are more precious in my estimation on account of your wisdom than all the turbulent and proud Pharisees, who abuse the freedom granted them by the Romans, conspire against Caesar and construe our bounty into fear. Insolent wretches, they are not aware that the wolf of the timber sometimes clothes himself with the skin of the sheep. I will protect you against them. My palace of justice is open to you as an asylum.'

"Jesus thoughtfully shook his head and said with a grace and a divine smile: 'When the day shall have come there will be no asylum for the Son of Man, neither in the earth nor under the earth. The asylum of the just is there,' pointing to the heavens. 'That which is written in the books of the prophets must be accomplished.'

"'Young man,' answered I mildly, 'you oblige me to convert my request into an order. The safety of the province, which has been confided to my care, requires You must observe more moderation [illegible] were impatient of the Roman yoke. They could never forgive me for having entered their holy city with banners that bore the image of the Roman Emperor, and although in this instance I had ignorantly committed the fatal error yet the sacrilege did not appear less heinous in their eyes. Another grievance also rankled in their bosoms; I had proposed to employ a part of the treasure of the temple in erecting edifices of public utility, which proposal was scowled at.

"The Pharisees, too, were avowed enemies of Jesus, and they cared not for our government. They bore with bitterness the severe reprimands which the Nazarene, for three years, had been throwing out against them wherever he went. Too weak and pusillanimous to act for themselves, they had eagerly embraced the quarrels of the Herodians and the Sadducees. Besides these three parties I had to contend against ... reckless and profligate populace, always ready to join a sedition, and to profit by the disorder and confusion resulting therefrom.

"Jesus was dragged before the High Priest and condemned to death.

"I am Joseph of Arimathea,' replied he, 'and am come to beg of you, upon my knees, the permission to bury Jesus of Nazareth.'

"'Your prayer is granted,' said I, to him; and at the same time ordered Manlius to take some soldiers with him to superintend the interment, lest it should be interfered with.

"A few days after the sepulchre was found empty. His disciples published all over the country that Jesus had risen from the dead, as he had foretold.

"A last duty remained to be performed, and that was to communicate to the Emperor these deplorable events. I did so on the night that followed the fatal catastrophe, and had just finished the communication when day began to dawn. At that moment, the sound of clarions, playing the air of Diana, struck my ear. Casting my eye toward the Caesarean gate, I beheld a troop of soldiers, and heard at a distance other trumpets sounding Caesar's march.

"It was the reinforcement that had been promised me—two thousand chosen troops, who, to hasten their arrival, had marched all night. It has been decreed by the fates,' cried I, wringing my hands, 'that the great iniquity should be accomplished; that for the purpose of averting the deeds of yesterday, troops should arrive to-day. Cruel destiny, how thou sportest with the affairs of mortals!' It was but too true what the Nazarene exclaimed while writhing on the cross: 'All is consummated!'"

After coughs and colds the germs of consumption often gain a foothold.

Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil with Hypophosphites will not cure every case; but, if taken in time, it will cure many.

Even when the disease is farther advanced, some remarkable cures are effected. In the most advanced stages it prolongs life, and makes the days far more comfortable. Everyone suffering from consumption needs this food tonic.

A Delicate Subject.

Professor Mahaffy was once traveling in England, and in the same compartment with him was a melancholy gentleman dressed in black, who inquired of Dr. Mahaffy was he saved? "Yes," was the reply, "but it was a narrow squeak, and I don't like talking much about it."

Smoked the Samples.

There was given the other day in an up town street an illustration of the way in which articles are often hopelessly perverted from the uses for which they were intended by their makers. It was at the noon luncheon hour. The Italian laborers who, in accordance with the prevailing fashion, were engaged in tearing up the pavement had suspended their labors and were partaking of their midday meal as they sat on the sidewalks and the steps of the houses.

Presently a man who carried a large basket came around the corner. He started down the street, distributing from the basket at each house a small package of one of the new cereal products at present being advertised as greatly superior to coffee as a beverage. He merely laid these packages on the window sills and did not ring the doorbells. After him at a distance followed one of the Italians, evidently deputed to the task by his companions. He carefully gathered up all of the samples and carried them to where the group of workmen sat. Clearly the Italians knew what the packages contained, for they were opened—not curiously, but in a matter of fact way. The brown, finely ground contents were transferred promptly into the pipe bowls of the assemblage, and, having been set alight, were soon going up in smoke, affording as much pleasure apparently to the sons of toil as if the cereal substitute for coffee had been the finest golden Virginia.—New York Tribune.

Convicts Needing No Guards.

The anomalous spectacle of a large gang of penitentiary convicts working in the open, with no officers or armed force to guard them, is presented every day at Yuma, A. T. They are camped on the Colorado river, a little above Yuma, to be exact, and they are engaged in cutting wood for the territory. None of them escapes. None tries to escape. Why do they stay? Because each man guards the other. Each man is a "short termer," none of them having more than a year to serve. All are allowed a rebate for the work they do. When a convict has cut two cords of wood, he has earned a day's rebate on his term. But should one escape all lose rebates. Thus each man becomes his brother's keeper.—San Francisco Call.

Too Much Prejudiced.

A Texas judge was robbed of a horse not long ago, and the thief, being apprehended, was brought before him for trial. The judge eyed the prisoner with deep satisfaction for a minute or so and then delivered himself of the following: "Owing to a personal prejudice the court will not hear this case. It will be tried by the bailiff, who will find a verdict in accordance with the facts. In the meantime," he added impressively, "the court will go outside and bend a rope and pick out a good tree."—San Francisco Argonaut.

While the mother lies to the underbrush. The hawk will not eat flesh that he thinks is carrion. At a signal from the hidden mother the little ones rise and scamper to her. The hawk is then out of sight.

Some of the things a wild turkey does smack of the reasoning faculty. For instance, a hen will never tread upon the same ground in approaching her nest. She fears to make a path. The ability of the birds to discover danger can hardly be due wholly to sight, phenomenal as it is. Possibly they have a sixth sense. A turkey will detect the movement of a finger 100 yards away. Perfect stillness is the hunter's only chance. Some of them declare that they are afraid to wink one eyelash. As a table bird the wild turkey is much superior to its domesticated brother, especially when baked in the ground and steamed all night in its own royal juices. —Chicago Times-Herald.

The Cause of Her Anger.

"Men are the most brutal creatures," said the young wife to her feminine friend.

"What makes you think so?"

"The way my husband treated me this afternoon."

"What did he do?"

"He came home from the office, and in the first place he kissed me, and"—

"He ought to be asha"—

"Oh, it isn't that, of course. But pretty soon he mentioned casually that he saw Mrs. Dawkins this afternoon and that she had on a beautiful new dress. And then he—what do you suppose he did?"

"I can't guess. What is it?"

"Went to talking about something else."

"The brute!"

"Yes, and I'll die before I will ask him, but"—

"So would I."

But she asked him the very next morning at breakfast, and when he said he believed it was some sort of a green or blue, or possibly brown, with yellow or gray trimmings—he was not certain which—and a sash, she said a woman might as well talk with a Fiji islander as with her husband for all the instructive information she would obtain from him.

And her husband was surprised to notice that she seemed almost angry about something or other.—Denver Times.

Italian Regard For Animals.

Not long ago I was a passenger on one of the lake steamers which ply between Desenzano and Riva. It was a day of wild wind and driving storm. At Salo a peasant of a peculiarly truculent type came on board, clad in the shaggy cloak of the district and bearing a vast blue umbrella no less indigenous. With him, too, he brought his donkey. Now, even Italian steamers do not knowingly admit quadrupeds of this size to the shelter of the fore cabin, though possibly if they did no great harm would be done or sentiment violated. The beast, therefore, was tethered on the open deck and thus became exposed to the fury of wind and weather, not to mention wave. A British peasant would probably have accepted the situation and let him bide. Not so the Lombard. Hastily divesting himself of his ample overcoat, he spread it carefully over the "lower animal's" back, and, unfurling his voluminous umbrella, held that patiently over the asinine head (and his own) all the way to Riva. Now, here, surely, was a good man, merciful to his beast.—London Times.

Romance in an Egg Shell.

Last July a citizen bought a dozen of eggs at a grocery store, and on examining his purchase he found a line written with a lead pencil, asking the purchaser to communicate with Miss Maggie M——, Erinsville, who was a lone spinster, not too bad looking, and in search of a husband. Signing himself David Sprung, care Y.M.C.A., Kingston, the citizen wrote a card to the direction given. Yesterday he received the following letter from the poor, lone spinster:

Mr. David Sprung, Kingston, Ont.

"I just received your card yesterday, which you wrote last July 27th. It was mislaid as the address was not just correct. But I am real glad you enjoyed the eggs so well, but so sorry it was not double-yolked as you would have appreciated it much better. I am sorry to hear that you are so lonely a bachelor and I such a lonely maid, but if there is anything I can do to make your miserable life happy, just let me know and I will do all that is in my power. You wanted to know where we could meet. I will leave that to you to appoint. Hoping to hear from you soon. Write at once. My address is Miss Maggie M——, Erinsville P.O., Ont."

The recipient of the letter will write at once and ask Maggie to send her photograph and enclose a few tender inquiries as to her mother's health; or perhaps "Maggie" is some young man who is writing to see whom he will catch.—Kingston News.

Resolution of Condolence.

At the regular meeting of Puritan Lodge No. 312 A.O.U.W. held on Monday evening January 24th inst., the following resolution was passed. That whereas it has pleased the Great Master Workman of The Universe to remove from our number by death our beloved brother Edward J. Madden Esq. It is therefore resolved that we convey to Mrs. Madden and family our heartfelt sympathy and condolence in this their time of great bereavement, and we desire to express our hearty appreciation of the genial disposition and many other admirable and sterling qualities of our late brother whose death makes the first-break in our ranks and whose life and character exemplified in a large degree the watchwords of our order, Charity, Hope and Protection.

Signed on behalf of Puritan Lodge No. 312 A.O.U.W.

A Grand Entertainment.

Notwithstanding the inclement weather the sacred concert and organ recital in the Eastern Methodist church on Wednesday evening was largely attended. It is not beside the fact to say that it was one of the finest entertainments ever given in Napanee. Mr. Harold Jarvis, the gifted tenor, of Toronto, completely captured the audience and his every effort was encored to the echo. Mr. Jarvis has a rich, clear voice, of wonderful range, and this, together with a fine stage presence, render him irresistable. He is equally at home in Scotch or English songs and his "March of the Cameron Men" took the audience by storm. Miss Lillian M. Hall presided at the organ and rendered several fine solos which were much appreciated. Mr. P. VanBuskirk, Baritone soloist, sang several selections. This gentleman possesses a fine voice but lacks the animation which characterizes all Mr. Jarvis' efforts. Mr. W. D. Rockwell, Napanee's talented tenor delighted the audience with several fine selections. Mrs. Frank Vanluven contri-

Death of Henry A. Allen.

Henry A. Allen, a prominent citizen of Marlbank, passed away after a few days illness of pnuemonia. Deceased was a son of the late Dr. Allen and a brother of R. B. Allen, of Napanee. He leaves a wife, two daughters and one son to mourn his loss. Deceased was about 60 years of age. The funeral took place to the Marlbank cemetery on Monday and was largely attended.

Grand Masquerade Carnival.

The first grand masquerade carnival of the season will be held at the Pollard & Wilson rink this (Friday) evening. The curling rink will be open to skaters, and the Citizens' band will furnish choice music during the evening. Three prizes will be given for the best lady masks, and three prizes for the best gentlemen's masks. The prizes are contributed by Boyle & Son, The Robinson Co., Lahey & McKenty, W. G. Coxall, and the proprietors of the rink. A grand time is expected. Admission, 15 cents.

The Grant-Lucas Debate.

The much talked of debate on Prohibition between Principal Grant and Dr. Lucas took place at Kingston last week and was largely attended. Dr. Lucas was no match for the astute Principal of Queen's University, although it cannot be said that the speakers applied themselves to answering one anothers arguments. The men were not evenly matched as Principal Grant is pre-eminently a debater while Dr. Lucas is more of an orator. The debate yielded $284.60 after all expenses were met. Of this sum $185.60 was sent to the Poor Relief Society, a Protestant organization, and $100 to the St. Vincent de Paul Society.

A Fierce Storm.

This has been a record breaking week. The bulb started to descend on Friday night and it has been below the zero mark ever since. On Saturday morning the thermometer registered 28 degrees below. For the past four days we have been treated to an old fashioned blizzard, which reached its height on Wednesday night, and blew itself out on Thursday morning. On Tuesday the roads were so badly blocked that the Kingston stage was unable to make the circuit and remainded in town all day. The Erinsville stage came through on Wednesday but was unable to make the return trip. Out in the country the roads are badly blocked and it will take some days to break them.

For Public School Teachers.

The following circular has been sent to the Inspector by the Minister of Education: "My attention has been drawn to certain printed note books called "New School Helps," advertised for use in the Public Schools of the Province. The injurious effects of such helps in the proper study and teaching of the school curriculum must be apparent to every well trained teacher. It has been the settled policy of the Education Department to insist that no books except those on the authorized list can be used as text books in the school, and the use of the new "School Helps" or other "Summaries" instead of the authorized text books, is a clear violation of the statutes and the regulations. You are hereby instructed to make immediate enquiry regarding the use of the "Helps" above referred to, or other "notes" or "summaries" which may be substituted for the text books, and to withhold the grants in all cases where the law is violated."

EXPRESSIONS.

The editor and ex-editor having exchanged compliments the people are wondering what it is all about.

Now that Grant and Lucas have spoken the Government will no doubt trot out the Plebiscite.

COUNTY COUNCIL.

JANUARY SESSION.

(Concluded from last week.)

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

Council came to order at 2 p.m.

Moved by Messrs. Symington and Aylsworth that $25 be granted to the Amherst Island Institutes.—Lost.

Moved by Messrs. Martin and Riley that the sum of $55 be granted to the Farmers' Institutes of this county, to be divided as follows: Addington Institute $25, Lennox Institute $20, Amherst Island Institute $10—Lost.

Moved by Messrs. Allison and Oliver that $25 be granted to Addington Institute, $25 to Lennox Institute and $15 to Amherst Island Institute.—Lost.

On motion of Messrs. Allison and Oliver $15 was granted to Amherst Island Farmer's Institute.

A motion by Messrs. Symington and Aylsworth that the Amherst Island Institute be granted $20 was lost.

On motion $300 was granted to the Kingston General Hospital as that institution has sustained considerable loss by fire.

Mr. Symington presented a by-law fixing county councillors remuneration which received its first reading.

The council proceeded to elect a High School Trustee for Napanee by ballot without nomination. The ballot resulted as follows:

	1st.	2nd.
Nelson Wagar.....	5	7
Stephen Gibson.....	3	1
Jno. English.....	1	2

The Warden declared Nelson Wagar elected.

Rev. Joseph Gandier was appointed High School Trustee for Newburgh.

Council adjourned until 10 a.m.

FRIDAY MORNING.

Council came to order at 10 a.m., Warden presiding, members all present.

Minutes of yesterday were read and confirmed.

On motion the usual grant of $25 was granted to the Lennox & Addington Teachers Association.

An account of A. E. Paul, $2.25, was ordered to be paid.

The council went into committee of the whole on the second reading of Mr. Symington's by-law regulating the remuneration of county councillors and county officials. The by-law was taken up clause by clause.

Clause 1, regulating the duration of each session was struck out.

Clause 2, that the remuneration of each county councillor for attendance at regular or special sessions of the county council shall be $2.50 per day and mileage at five cents per mile each way was adopted.

Mr. Keech moved that the remuneration be $8 for each session.

Mr. Symington moved that the remuneration be $3 per day. Mr. Allison's motion that it be fixed at $2.50 per day prevailed.

Clause 3 placed the remuneration for service on committee at the same rate as attendance at the sessions of the council, $2.50 per day and mileage.

Clause 4 provides that should two or more committees be convened on the same day and at the same place then the members of the committee shall be paid only one day's pay and one mileage.

Clause 5 provides that each member of the Board of Audit appointed from the council shall be paid $2.50 per day and mileage for attendance at the meetings of the Board.

The committee rose and reported progress and asked leave to sit again.

Council adjourned until 2 p.m.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

Council came to order at 2 p.m., Warden presiding.

Mr. Amey presented the first report of the County Property Committee recommending that the following accounts be paid: F. E. Vanluven, $81.15; Jno Gleason, $20; A. W. Grange & Bro., $3.66. An account of T. A. Huffman, $5.10, was referred to the Board of Audit. The report of the committee was adopted.

Mr. Keech presented the first report of the Education & Printing Committee recommending that the following accounts be paid: The Star, $126.83; County Clerk, $9.10; THE EXPRESS, $4; the Beaver, $4; F. Burrows, $4. Re the account of Grange & Bro., ink for Registrary Office, recommended that it be not paid. The committee further recommended that the usual grant of $400 be made to the poor schools of Addington. Board of Registration.

The Board of Registration of Manhood Suffrage Voters will hold two sittings in the council chamber in the Napanee town hall for the registration of persons claiming to be entitled to vote in the oncoming Ontario elections under the provisions of the new Provincial law. His Honor Judge Wilkison is chairman of the board and the members are James Daly, Police Magistrate, and W. P. Deroche, Clerk of County Court. James E. Herring has been appointed clerk of the board. The first sitting will be held on Monday, Feb. 7th, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, and continue until six o'clock in the evening, with intermission from one to two o'clock. The second setting will be held on Tuesday, Feb. 8th, at 10 a.m. and continue until 9 o'clock in the evening. The new act provides that every male person of the full age of twenty-one, a subject of the Queen by birth or naturalization, is entitled to be entered upon the list of manhood suffrage voters for the polling sub division in which he resides as provided by Sec. 4. Chap. 8, R. S. O., 1897:— Every male person twenty-one years of age, who has resided within the Province twelve months next preceding the first sitting of the Board of Registration and for three months in the municipality and for thirty days domiciled within the riding. To be entitled to have your name on the list you must have been a resident of the riding of Lennox on Nov. 7th. The act only applies to cities and county towns. It will be necessary for all persons not having property qualifications to register. Registration does not make you liable for poll tax, where such is in force. All young men should see that their names are placed on the lists.

The Ponton Case.

Under a flash heading the Belleville Ontario on Wednesday published the following: "A rumor on the streets to-day to the effect that W. H. Ponton, who has an action pending against the Dominion Bank for $50,000 damages for false arrest and imprisonment, had been offered $10,000 by the bank to drop the case, caused no little sensation and was one of the principal topics of discussion on the streets. A reporter of the Ontario called on Mr. E. Gus Porter, Mr. Ponton's solicitor, and asked him if there was anything in the rumor. Mr. Porter said there was nothing at present for publication. "Did the bank officials make any kind of an offer?" further inquired the scribe. "I cannot say anything at present," said Mr. Porter, "but I will say that if the bank officials were to offer $10,000 it would be promptly refused. We have too good a case to be satisfied with that sum, and such an offer could not be entertained." There is every reason to believe the bank has made some advances, but they have been met with a bold reception, and no doubt when the case comes up in April next it will prove one of the most interesting trials that have ever taken place in Belleville." An EXPRESS representative called Mr. J. H. Madden's attention to the article. "It's all rot," said the solicitor for the Dominion Bank. Mr. Madden said the article was a pure fabrication. The case will be tried at Napanee unless a change of venue is asked for. Mr. Pepler, manager of the Napanee branch of the Dominion Bank, says the bank has made no overtures to Mr. Ponton, and that there is no truth in the rumor circulated by the Ontario.

KIDNEY PAIN.

John Snell, of Wingham, Ont., was in a Maelstrom of Pain and Agony from Diseased Kidneys—South American Kidney Cure was the Welcome "Life Preserver"—It Relieves Instantly and Cures Surely.

"Five years ago I had a severe attack of La Grippe which affected my kidneys and caused intense pains in my back and urinary organs. I suffered untold misery, at times I could not walk, and any standing position gave me intense pain. I became worse so rapidly that my family became alarmed. Just at this time I noticed South American Kidney Cure advertised. Although I had little faith left in any remedy—having tried so many worthless ones—but a drowning man will grasp at a straw, and I procured a bottle. In a few days it had worked wonders, and before half a bottle was taken I was totally relieved of pain and two bottles entirely cured me.

ations. That there be an examination held at Flinton for passing the public school leaving examination pupils, providing that the municipalities interested pay the examiner's expenses of said examination, and that it be affiliated with the Napanee High School. That Bowen E. Aylsworth be a delegate from this council to the trustees convention to be held at Toronto on April 2nd. That the petition of the County of Bruce be filed. That the chairman call for tenders for printing for the year 1898.

The report of the committee was adopted.

The council went into committee of the whole for the further consideration of Mr. Symington's by-law.

Clause six in reference to fixing the County Clerk's salary was struck out.

Mr. Symington moved that the Clerk's salary be fixed at $300 per year this to cover all supplies and stationery required by him.

The clerk receives $300 per year and the council supplies the necessary stationery. The general impression of the council was that the County's Clerk's remuneration is is little enough now without calling upon him to supply his own stationery, and therefore the clause in the by-law was struck out and the salary left as heretofore.

Clause seven provides that the messenger shall be paid $1 per day for attendance on the council while in session.

Messrs. Martin and Keech moved that the services of a messenger be dispensed with, but it was voted down.

The by-law as amended received its third reading, and was signed, sealed numbered and finally passed.

Council adjourned until 10 a.m.

SATURDAY MORNING.

Council came to order at 10 a.m., Warden presiding, members all present.

Minutes of yesterday weregread and confirmed.

An account of S. J. Howard, $2.75, was ordered to be paid.

A tender from Mr. Chas. Stevens re County printing was received.

On motion Mr. Stevens' tender was ordered to be opened.

Mr. Stevens agreed to do the county printing and advertising for the year 1898 for $400.

On motion the time for receiving tenders for county printing was extended for one hour.

On motion $25 was granted to the Lennox Farmers' Institute and $25 to Addington Institute.

SHATTERED NERVES AND PARALYSIS.

Shattered Nerves Developed Nervous Prostration—Nervous Prostration Developed Total Paralysis of One Side—Great South American Nervine in the Teeth of Most Adverse and Complicated Circumstances Overcomes All, and Restores Wife and Mother in Good Health to her Family—These are the Written Words of Edward Parr, Surry Centre, B.C.

"My wife was taken bad last August with nervous prostration, which later on developed into paralysis of one side. We tried many remedies, but all in vain. I thought I would try South American Nervine, having seen it advertised in the New Westminster, B.C., papers, and I am glad to be able to say that the result after taking three bottles was an astonishment to myself and family. It worked wonders for her and we cannot speak too highly of this great remedy." No case too acute or of too long standing to defy its wonderful merits.

Safe and Pure Dye-stuffs

Our legislators have enacted stringent laws for the prevention of food adulteration, and as result our people have been benefitted, and all classes of our population get value for their money.

It would be a boon to the women of Canada if the adulteration act applied to package dyes sold for home dyeing. Dyestuffs are now used in tens of thousands of homes, and too frequently valuable goods and materials are spoiled by use of adulterated dyes that should be prohibited by law.

The Diamond Dyes for long years have given the most complete satisfaction. They are the only reliable, pure and fast dyes now before the public— the only package dyes that can stand the most crucial chemical tests.

Diamand Dyes are sold by all up-to date druggists and dealers. If you meet a dealer who recommends some other make of dye, pause before you buy from him. Such a dealer is working only for big profits; he has no regard for your success and comfort.

THE COMING OF LOVE.

I dreamed that love came as the oak trees grow,
By the chance dropping of a tiny seed,
And then from moon to moon with steady speed,
Though torn by winds and chilled with heedless snow,
The sap of pulsing life would upward flow
Till in its might the heavens themselves could read
Portents of power that they must learn to heed.
This was my dream. The waking proved not so,
For love came like a flower and grew apace.
I saw it blossom, tenderly and frail,
Till the dear spring had run its eager race.
Then the rough wind tossed high the petals red.
The seed fell far in soil beyond my pale.
I know not now if love be lost or dead.
—Helen Hay in Harper's Magazine.

The Tribe Is Worse In England Than Over Here, Though.

First God (whistling anxiously across the house)—Hi, 'Arry, where's little Billy?

Second God (returning the cat call)—Hi, 'e's swallered his shillin, and the cove won't let 'im in.

First God—Well, of all the bloomin blokes. (Intrepidly) I'm off to turn Billy upside down and get that "bob" back.

First Goddess (with severity)—Sit down, Jim. Don't make a hexibition of yourself. Sit down, I say. 'Ave done.

First God (resolutely)—I'm going arter Billy (endeavors to force his way out).

Various Voices of Expostulation—Keep quiet! Sit down! You're drunk!

First God (indignantly facing his accusers)—All right. Keep your 'air on. Drunk, am I? We'll soon see who's drunk.

First Goddess (in minatory tones)—Look 'ere, Jim, it's the last time I ever come out with you, see if it ain't. You're a disgrace, that's what you are. No, never again.

Second Goddess (with the best intentions)—My good woman, 'adn't you better take your 'usband 'ome?

First Goddess (promptly returning good for evil)—Who are you a-talking to? I'm not a good woman, and this gentleman ain't my husband. No need for you to hinterfere.

Second Goddess (loudly to a neighboring divinity)—What a hojious person, dear.

First Goddess (with bellicose looks)—Person, indeed! There are some persons who'd be better at 'ome frying their ugly faces. No, Jim, I shan't. She's no laidy. (The orchestra strikes up.)

Voices (from behind, as before)—Sh! Sh! Order! Silence! Turn 'er out!

First Goddess (competing with the trombone)—That's what I say, turn 'er out! Himpertenence! (And in such wise, until the curtain rises, when her attention is at once attracted to the stage.) Oh, my! Jim, ain't that beautiful?—London World.

A Very Young Partisan.

At the time of one of the late presidential campaigns, when even children caught the infection of politics, Hattie, between 3 and 4 years old, accompanied her mother upon a visit to some friends in Michigan. Upon the first evening in the strange house, when Hattie's hour for going to sleep came, she was so excited it was difficult for her to compose herself. At last her mother said:

"Hattie, dear, I am anxious that you get quiet and go to sleep because I want to go down stairs and join in the evening prayers."

"Who's doing to pway?" asked Hattie.

"Why, Uncle William, of course, dear."

"Uncle William pway?" said the baby, with wide eyed astonishment and springing up in bed in the vigor of her surprise. "W'y, I fawt he was a Demokwat?"—Philadelphia Inquirer.

THE ROB

To the Electors of Lennox

GENTLEMEN,—

Having been chosen by the Liberal Party of Lennox as their candidate at the next election, I wish publicly to thank the party for the confidence reposed in me in tendering me the nomination. Since the meeting of the convention at which I was so chosen I have visited mamy parts of the riding and have met with most encouraging support, both from Liberals and old time Conservatives.

I have been asked to outline my policy, and in brief I may say that it shall ever be my policy to study the needs of the people of this Province in general and of this riding in particular, and to use my best endeavors to advance what I believe to be the best interests of my constituents. I unhesitatingly announce my faith in the general policy of Mr. Hardy and his colleagues, because I believe it has been, and is, their aim to conduct the affairs of the Province in an honest and business like manner. The very fact that the Opposition has failed to point out a single instance of corruption during a period of twenty-five years is conclusive evidence to my mind of the purity of the adminstration. While I am a believer in the ability, honesty and integrity of the present Government, I reserve to myself the right to criticize that Government in all matters when I feel it is to the public interest to do so. I most emphatically repudiate any intention upon my part to blindly follow any man or any set of men.

I have also been asked my views upon the question of granting bonuses to the manufacturers of iron. I am not in sympathy with this policy, because I do not believe it to be to the best interests of the majority of the people of this province, and if elected I will use my influence against the present bonus system.

Between now and the day of the election I hope to have an opportunity of discussing the public questions of the day with all of the electors of Lennox, and to carefully weigh any suggestions relating to the public good, as my sole aim, if elected, will be to honestly represent the people of Lennox in all matters coming before the House.

Thanking you for the generous support accorded me in the past, which I shall confidently rely upon in the future, I remain,

Your obedient servant

B. E. AYLSWORTH.

SING A SONG.

If you'll sing a song as you go along,
In the face of the real or the fancied wrong,
In spite of the doubt if you'll fight it out,
And show a heart that is brave and stout:
If you'll laugh at the jeers and refuse the tears
You'll force the ever reluctant cheers
That the world denies when a coward cries,
To give to the man who bravely tries.
And you'll win success with a little song—
If you'll sing the song as you go along!

If you'll sing a song as you plod along,
You'll find that the busy, rushing throng
Will catch the strain of the glad refrain;
That the sun will follow the blinding rain;
That the clouds will fly from the blackened sky;
That the stars will come out by and by.
And you'll make new friends till hope descends
From where the placid rainbow bends.
And all because of a little song—
If you'll sing the song as you plod along!

If you'll sing a song as you trudge along,
You'll see that the singing will make you strong.
And the heavy load and the rugged road,
And the sting and the stripe of the tortuous goad
Will soar with the note that you set afloat;
That the beam will change to a trifling mote;
That the world is bad when you are sad
And bright and beautiful when glad;
That all you need is a little song—
If you'll sing the song as you trudge along!

Is There Such a Disease as Hydrophobia?

The belief seems to be growing among scientists that there is, after all, no such disease as hydrophobia. This strikes deep at the root of a long established and venerable opinion, and will no doubt be received with a great deal of opposition, but there is so much to be said on the subject and so many experiments have been made that one is inclined to suspend judgment at least and wait for further development. An incident is related where a man was bitten upon the side of his face by a pet dog. He applied to the hospital for treatment, and was found to be extremely nervous. The dog was carefully examined and pronounced by the veterinary to be in perfect health. Some experiments by inoculation were tried on rabbits without any unpleasant results. Again and again were the rabbits inoculated, and they remained to all appearance as well as ever. But the man became more and more nervous and frightened, and finally died, of what disease the attendants in the hospital found it very difficult to determine, although the death certificate was issued for hydrophobia.

Some eminent medical men declare that one of the most important things is to attempt to eradicate from the public mind the idea that there is such a thing as hydrophobia. They claim that it never occurs in fact, but that there is a nervous terror which takes possession of the patient, who actually dies of what is nothing more or less than fright and nervous convulsions. Of course such a statement leaves a wide margin for discussion and debate. As a matter of fact, if there is no such thing as hydrophobia there certainly is a nervous state that becomes terrible in the extreme. Really there must be something of a serious nature to cause such dreadful suffering and death.

CENTERVILLE.

Plenty of snow at present. The cold and stormy weather of the past week has made the roads nearly impassable.

Elections are the topic of conversation Both candidates are in the back country at present. Each one seems confident of success. It is about time Addington sent a representative of the Government. In this riding Wartman should be the man as the Hardy Administration is sure to be returned to power. We expect shortly to hear the piggery question and "it is time for a change," discussed on the public platform.

Team work is about all completed

Our western stage has been snow-bound

Our cheese meeting was held on Friday last. The attendance was not large on account of the inclement weather. The same rules will govern in the future that did the past season.

Considering the difficulty one meets with in attempting to rear one of these tender plants in our variable climate Mr. Ross is to be congratulated on his success.

And now the candidate is abroad in the land, in fact three in our fair county, and on all sides and in every corner one hears nothing but excited discussions of party hobbies and dodges. Our Liberal Candidate is eighty-two years of age, and so far that is the only argument brought to bear against him that has reached the ears of your correspondent.

Many thanks for "Pilate's last Report" published in the last weeks "EXPRESS," it was very interesting Now that Pilate has been vindicated, those biblical scholars who have searched so diligently would do well to look over the old manuscripts in the Vatican library or in some of the old Buddhist temples in India for one which is claimed by some to exist and is said to account for the years of Christ's life not mentioned in the bible. Buddhists claim that those years were spent in India and that during that time Christ became an initiate in the mysteries of esoteric Buddhism. If the latter are right in their assertion we suppose the manuscript if found would be suppressed.

THE GRIM REAPER

WAS WAITING TO RECEIVE A BURDENED VICTIM OF KIDNEY DISEASE.

Paine's Celery Compound Saves a Life After Fifteen Years of Terrible Agony.

One of the Greatest Victories Over Disease Ever Recorded.

Mr. Kevill Says:
"Your Compound Banished All My Aches and Pain."

NO CASE TOO COMPLICATED FOR THE GREAT MEDICINE.

WELLS & RICHARDSON CO.,

DEAR SIRS:—For the past fifteen years I have been troubled with diseased kidneys. I am engaged in the manufacture of cheese, and am obliged to work more or less in a stooping posture. At times I found it almost impossible to work owing to severe pains across my kidneys. Often, after working in a stooping position for a time, I would find it very difficult to straighten up at once, and could only do so after repeated efforts.

Of late years, while laboring under these severe attacks, I became very nervous, and continually had tired, worn out feelings. My rest at night seemed to do me no good, and I always felt tired out in the morning.

I had been taking various medicines and was getting worse all the time. At last I decided to give Paine's Celery Compound a trial. I procured a bottle and took it according to directions, and found its effect wonderful. Before I had used the first bottle I began to improve; after I had used the second bottle I felt as well as ever I did in my life. It had banished all aches and pains, my nervousness was all gone, and the tired and worn out feelings were banished. I can go to bed now and sleep well, and arise in the morning rested and refreshed.

I have recommended Paine's Celery Compound to my friends who were suffering from the same troubles as I had, and all have been greatly benefitted. Knowing what it has done, I can cheerfully recommend it to any person suffering from kidney disease.

Yours truly,
C. F. KEVILL, Dunsford, Ont.

THE SLOAN MEDICINE CO.

Dear Sirs—For years I was troubled with periodical sick headaches, being affected usually every Sunday, and used all the remedies that were advertised as cures, and was treated by almost every doctor in Guelph but without any relief. One doctor told me it was caused by a weak stomach, another said it was hereditary and incurable. I was induced by a neighbor to try Sloan's Indian Tonic, and am happy to say I did so. A few doses gave immediate relief, and one bottle and a half made a complete cure.

This was three years ago and the headaches have never returned. I was also troubled with asthma and nothing helped me like your Sloan's Indian Tonic. I can heartily recommend it to all and will be glad to give any particulars to any one afflicted as I was.

THE Liberal Party is the party of progress.

The pig and the "thumping whopper" are still Mr. Whitney's policy.

MR. Whitney should rise and explain how he came to be a Director in an American Lumber Company.

IF there was any justification for the "Old Cries" against the Government the Opposition would not have abandoned them.

WHAT is to be gained by sending a conservative partizan of Dr. Meacham's stamp to Parliament? Did he ever do anything for Lennox, or Napanee? This banner county should send a supporter of the Government to Toronto.

BOWEN E. AYLSWORTH, the Liberal Candidate for Lennox, is an intelligent farmer with a long and honorable municipal record. His experience gained in serving the county as warden and county councillor will bear him in good stead in the next Legislature.

THERE is not a man of commanding ability in the ranks of the Opposition. Mr. Whitney has not introduced a useful piece of legislation during the time he has had a seat in the House. The men at his back are incompetent and illogical. It would be the height of folly to place the management of the affairs of the Province in such apprentice hands.

THE DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

The Dominion Parliament is now in session and the bill-of-fare provided is an excellent one. It includes bills for the abolition of the superannuation system, which has been so fruitful of abuse, and the repeal of the iniquitous, cumbersome and costly Franchise Act. The Yukon railway bill will also be laid before the House, and the Plebiscite will no doubt come up for discussion.

The debate on the address so far has been very interesting. Sir. Charles Tupper made one of his characteristic speeches in which he called down the Toronto World and W. F. McLean, M. P., one of his supporters in the House, with all the vigor of his extensive stock of superlatives. The Old War Horse also made a coarse attack on the Governor-General and when called to order by the speaker refused to retract his words, taking refuge under a man subterfuge. The meanness of Sir Charles conduct is accentuated by the fact that the Governor-General is precluded from making any reply by virtue of his position, it being an unwritten law of the constitution that the Governor-General must take it for granted that no subject of the Queen can possibly make a personal attack on Her Majesty or her representative, and therefore no matter what is said it must be disregarded in silence. Tupper has thrown off his mask, and shown that hiserstwhile boasted loyalty was a delusion and a snare. It but remained for Sir Richard Cartwright to point out that Sir Charles was but following an old Conservative precedent, that you might rotten egg the Governor-General and burn the Parliament buildings, and publish annexationist manifestos in order to express your extreme disapproval of Her Majesty's representative. Equally nasty were Sir Charles' references as to the legality of Sir Wilfred Laurier accepting the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor. The old Baronet's temper is not improved by being in Opposition nor does age bring him wisdom. His reference to the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor may have hurt the Premier's feelings, but it is safe to say that Sir. Charles' slighting words will be resented by every French Canadian in the Province of Quebec.

After listening to Sir. Charles verbosity one is doubly charmed by Sir Wilfred Laurier's graceful and finished rhetoric. His speech in reply to Sir Charles Tupper was a masterful effort and stamps him as one of the foremost orators of the day. It is doubtful if the Conservative forces were ever in a more demoralized condition. The Happy Family have turned on one another now that they are unable to gorge to repletion at the public trough. The McLean-Wallace faction is up in arms against their leader, and George Eulas Foster is gracefully poised on the fence, awaiting the outcome. Tupper says McLean is unfit to sit in Parliament and the irrepressible Billy replies in kind. It may be that retributive justice is about to overtake Sir Charles and like Sir Makenzie Bowell he will yet experience how it feels to be decapitated.

James Pliny Whitney, leader of her Majesty's Opposition, and a lawyer by profession, gives it as his opinion that "a man's a fool who does things by halves." If he wants to go to work, and has the proper audience to swallow it, he shouldn't lie in a half-hearted manner. No, rather let him out Anna Ananias. A small, weak, puny, vacillating, non-assertive lie will not excite the enthusiasm of his listeners, whereas a big, healthy, long, strong assertive lie "will startle them so that they will believe it against their will." Here is logic for you, gentlemen, from the able leader of a harmonious opposition, whose chief weakness is itself.

ment during this period. From 1888 to 1892 the Government expended $17,493,471 and of this amount the Opposition only objected to but $350. Either there was no extravagance or the Opposition were direlect in their duty.

ONTARIO and Quebec started out even at Confederation. Ontario has been under Liberal rule almost continuously since that time, while Quebec has been under the domination of the Conservatives. Quebec to-day has a provincial debt of over $32,207,000, while Ontario has a surplus of over $5,000,000. Here is food for reflection.

Permanently Cured.

A STORY TOLD BY A JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

Attacked With La Grippe Which Left Him Weak and Worn Out—Kidney Trouble Added Its Complications and the Sufferer Was Discouraged.

From the Journal, Summerside, P.E.I.

One of the best known men around Bedique and vicinity is Mr. Alfred Schurman, who has recently removed to North Carleton, Mr. Schurman was born in Bedique about seventy years ago. Some twenty-five years ago he was sworn in as a justice of the peace, and about twenty-one years ago he was appointed clerk of the county court, in both of which offices he has given every satisfaction. Mr. Schurman was also a farmer on a large scale and like most men engaged in that occupation led a busy life, being compelled to attend strictly to business, but less than a year ago he retired from farming and now lives in a cosy cottage in North Carleton. Before his retirement, work such as only a man engaged in that occupation knows anything about, claimed his attention. His increasing years made the burden heavier and the spring work of 1893 wore him completely out. This is what he tells about it, and how he was cured. "In the spring of 1893 the constant toil and drudgery connected with the work of farming wore me out completely, and the break down was the more complete because the results were coupled with the bad effects left by an attack of la grippe. One of the results of la grippe was a nasty cough, another was the complete loss of appetite. My spirits were greatly depressed and I felt that I had lived out my days. I always felt cold, and consequently the stove and I were great friends, but the cold affected more especially my feet and caused me great annoyance. Added to this complication was a serious kidney trouble which threatened to prove the worse enemy of all. I was unable to do any work, had no ambition and less strength, and was not a bit the better of all the doctor's medicine I had taken. It was my wife who advised me at last to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I bought six boxes and began taking them. My hope revived because a change for the better was soon taking place and before they were done I was

NAPANEE, FRIDAY, FEB 11th 1898.

TARTE must feel lonesome these days.

THE Mail & Empire is attacking Dr. Dewart because he is a Methodist.

A GOVERNMENT with a surplus of $5,000,000, can afford to burn a little pork.

FAITHFUL servants are deserving of reward. Return the Hardy Government to power.

THE Ontario Government has always exerted itself to advance the interest of agriculture. The Reformers have shown by their acts that they consider the farming industry as paramount to all others. The Guelph Agricultural College bears evidence to this, as does the aid granted to Farmer's Institutes and kindred societies.

THE Opposition are wont to dwell on the John Sandfield Macdonald surplus and to cry that it has been squandered by the Liberals. Let us investigate that squandering cry. Here are the total amounts expended by the Reform Government while in office:

Public works and buildings, nearly	$ 9,000,000
Distribution of surplus to municipalities	3,225,378
Grants to railways	6,500,000
Education	14,835,186
Agriculture and arts	3,471,715
Hospitals and charities	2,768,998
Asylums, etc	15,430,076
Administration of justice	2,694,594
Colonization roads	2,868,097

or a total of $61,749,044. Deduct the much boasted John Sandfield Macdonald surplus from this amount and it leaves a balance of $59,794,044, and this the Government has expended in the manner indicated above and has still a surplus of over $5,000,000 to the good. If building public works, aiding municipalities, (Lennox received over $40,000), assisting education, agriculture, and providing institutions for the care of the poor and unfortunate, is "squandering the people's money," why let us have more squandering.

THE young men owe nothing to the Tory party. The last Dominion election was held on lists four years old and many thousands of young men were disfranchised in consequence. The Ontario Government has given us the Manhood Suffrage Act, whereby every young man of the full age of 21 years, who is a British subject, is entitled to vote. In connection with this it is well to remember that Mr Whitney and his followers opposed the passing of the Manhood Suffrage Act.

THERE is no disputing the fact that the Ontario Government has a surplus of over $5,000,000. It is quite true that the John Sandfield Macdonald surplus has been spent, and it is also true that every dollar of it and more too, was pledged before John Sandfield Macdonald left office. After all the crucial question is not the size of the surplus: but was the money expended by the Reform Government well laid out. The Opposition cannot point to one instance where the peoples' money was not wisely and judiciously expended by the Reform Government.

FRANKLIN SECORD WARTMAN, the Liberal candidate for Addington, is of old U. E. Loyalist stock and in every respect a worthy descendent of worthy sires. He is a young man of more than ordinary ability and it is not overstating the case to say that his merits will soon win him recognition in the Ontario Legislature. Anyone at all conversant with the facts is well aware that Addington has not been fittingly represented in the Legislature for a long number of years. Mr. Reid is a man of mediocre ability and has not taken an active part in the proceedings of the House. It is true that at the last session of each Legislature he has been put forward to move a resolution that all grants to colonization roads should be placed in the hands of township councils for distribution. Of course Reid's resolution has been voted down on every occasion that it presented itself. The idea that a responsible Government would hand over money for the proper expenditure of which they are responsible to a set of men who are in no way beholden to them is too preposterous to be entertained. It would be an injudicious and unwise move to place the money voted for the aid of colonization roads in the power of township councils. The money granted for the aid of colonization roads has been wisely expended by the Government. Last year $500 was expended on the Clare river road to Cloyne and the work reflects credit on those who had it in charge. The work could not have been done more expeditiously or economically if it had been a private enterprise.

SICK HEADACHE, however annoying and distressing, is positively cured by LAXA-LIVER PILLS. They are easy to take and never gripe.

HEART PAIN.

Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart Defies the Most Intense Pains—No Matter How Long Standing the Trouble, it Masters Disease in Half an Hour, and in the Case of John Crow Five Bottles Cured Heart Disease of Ten Year's Standing—Here's His Testimony Unsolicited:—

John Crow, son of Mr. George Crow, farmer, near the village of Tara, Ont., writes: "I was alarmingly afflicted with palpitation and enlargement of the heart for nearly ten years. I doctored with best physicians and tried numerous remedies with very little benefit. In our local papers I noticed Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart advertised, and I determined to give it a trial. Inside of half an hour I had relief. I have taken about five bottles, and feel to-day that I am as well as ever I was.

It can be further opined that if the same James Pliny Whitney and his motley followers were allowed to replace the Hardy Government they wouldn't "do things by halves." Ontario's $5,000,000 surplus would soon be non-existent and the Rykert-Tupperian policy of "providing something for the boy" would soon deplete our timber limits and render direct taxation a stern reality instead of an election bugaboo.

Mr. Whitney visited Kingston last week and according to the Kingston News' report of his speech delivered himself of the following:

"Well, now, I believe a man's a fool who does things by halves and when a man wants to go to work and thinks he has got the proper audience to swallow it and can produce a great, big, thumping whopper, he is a fool if he produces a small one—(great laughter)—because a small one may not excite the enthusiasm of his listeners, whereas a large one will startle them so that they will believe it against their will."

This refreshing bit of candor was received with great laughter. They say open confession is good for the soul and no doubt Mr. Whitney adopted this way of letting himself down easy for his repudiation in the Legislature of his extravagant utterances on the stump. Messrs. St. John, Willoughby and Col. Mathieson are embued with their leader's belief also. They do not stop at half measures. When the (physically) great St. John was making the welkin ring with his denunciations of the extravagance of the Ontario Government in regard to the management of the Humber piggery he stated with great emphasis that the swinarium had cost the Province anywhere from $60,000 to $80,000. When the piggery was discussed in the Legislature it was found that its cost was in the neighborhood of $7,000, and that instead of being a burden on the Province the piggery had proved a source of revenue, despite the outbreak of hog cholera which necessitated the destruction of the piggery and the burning of 96 hogs. St. John on the stump was as bold as a royal Bengal tiger in regard to the piggery extravagence, but when confronted with his own words on the floor of the House there was not a bleat out of him. Instead of attempting to substantiate his charges of extravagance he endeavored to show that the Government had been guilty of impecuniousness in placing tainted pork upon the market. We are not in a position to say that St. John's "great, big, thumping whoppers" were swallowed by his audiences, but any advantage thus gained was more than counterbalanced by the way St. John and his leader were forced to swallow their own words in the Legislature. Dr. Willoughby, on the stump, proved a decided success in the "whopper" line, also. He dealt on the uselessness of the Agricultural College, and didn't do "things by halves" in condemning the extravagance (?) of the Minister of Agriculture. Col. Mathieson's contribution to the programme of "doing nothing by halves" was perhaps the best of the series. He showed that the Ontario Government had no surplus and that the Province was face to face with direct taxation. The great drawback to the success of Mr. Whitney's latest policy is the difficulty of getting the "proper audience." The generality of audiences throughout Ontario won't enthuse worth a cent over "great, big, thumping whoppers."

THE actions of the Opposition in the Legislature give the lie to their extravagant utterances on the stump. They accuse the Government of extravagance and maladministration, but from 1884 to 1897, a period of 14 years, they but objected to $248,146 of the forty-seven million four hundred and seventeen thousand four hundred and eighty

The next spring however my health again gave way and I immediately began using the Pink Pills again and I am happy to say that they effected that time a permanent cure and to-day I am well and hearty as if I were only forty. I strongly recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to all who are suffering as I was.

A Handsome Gown.

A handsome gown made in Berlin is thus described: "The skirt of a mouse gray reception toilet was of figured moire, decorated with an apronlike arrangement of openwork embroidery, the rosettes and flowers being made very plastic by means of a thick underlining, which permits the delicate shade of the satin lining to shimmer through. The waist was similarly arranged with a traverse empiecement of small satin bands, which fell over the jabot of yellow guipure lace. On the neck was a garland of wired points or tabs and white silk gauze ruches. The waist disappeared beneath a belt of gold and silver braid finished with silver rosettes. The leg o' mutton sleeves were in the form of a spiral above, the plaits nar-

Interesting Notes for the Ladies.

Success in Dyeing Means Pleasure and Profit.

Beware of crude and worthless imitations of Diamond Dyes. See that your dealer gives you the "Diamond" when you ask for them.

Diamond Dyes have a world wide reputation; their work is of the highest order, and their success is deserved.

There are forty-eight colors in the Diamond Dyes for dyeing wool and cotton goods; each dye is perfectly true to color, and as reliable as pure gold.

Diamond Dyes color anything any color. They are fast to soap, washing and sun, and surpass all others in brilliancy.

Diamond Dyes are the strongest dyes made, hence the cheapest; one package is equal to three of any other make.

Never be deceived by the false claims of imitators of Diamond Dyes. If your merchant asks you to accept another make of dyes, be sure he is after large profits, and never thinks of your comfort and sucess.

A DIFFERENT GAME.

He Looked Like a Jay, but He Knew His Friends.

The two smartly dressed men went in at the main entrance to the apartment house and left the benevolent looking old chap with the patriarchal beard standing in the archway. When he had been there 15 minutes he began to get nervous walked down to the curb and looked up at the windows of the six story structure. Then he sauntered back to the entrance and leaned against a pillar. Pretty soon he took to pacing up and down the walk. He peered through the plate glass doors into the hallway, then fidgeted about on the steps for a time. Finally he walked to the curb again and stood looking up at the windows once more.

The wise man, who had been watching the performance from the drug store across the street, sauntered over and remarked casually:

"Maybe you didn't know there is a rear entrance on the alley."

"Huh?" queried the old gentleman.

"I say your friends are a long time coming back," said the newcomer, with a cynical smile.

"Yes, they be ruther longer'n I expected," admitted he of the beard.

"Said they'd be right down, didn't they?"

"Yep."

The interested spectator smiled some more and inquired:

THE BULBUL OF POHICK.

She Writes a Poem of Welcome to the Congress.

A great many people (writes the Bulbul of Pohick) think that this country is behind the times because it hasn't any poet laureate. They are wrong. The continent is full of them. And the beauty of it is they can wait as long as they please before getting up pieces without anybody finding fault. The spectacle of a man feeling that every time a royal family gives a pink tea he has got to write a poem about it or lose his job is one that fills me with sympathy. The only danger in this country is that something of importance may occur without having poetry wrote on it. It has never yet happened, but in order to take no chances I have penned the following lines, entitled:

WELCOME, CONGRESS! THRICE WELCOME!

Oh, congress has come—hurrah, hurrah—
To make speeches and dally with the law.
From the north, the south, the west and the east
There are several hundred of them at least.
There are many kinds of congresses, so they say.
Some pass bills and some pass the time away.
But let the public remember as the expense they joyously pay
That in the long run congress has given us many reasons to be happy and gay.
It is never safe for anybody to condemn congress too far in advance,
For this is a land where in politics each has a chance.
Remember, before allowing yourself to be vexed,
There is no telling who may go there next;
That some one who finds such his happy lot
May be one of your own relations as like as not,
And on such an occasion no one feels like he or she had the authority
To find any fault with the will of the majority.
As reports of the reichsrath's recent doings I scan,
I am glad our congress is not run on the European plan.
Before it meets it is usual for folks to try
Their very best to prophesy.
Exactly what will be done I do not know,
And I am a cheap franker than many in saying so,
But this much I am prepared to state:
We are a nation proud and great
And even though Cuba's future troubles should reach an enormous amount
On numerous personal expressions of sympathy she can always count.
And whatever else to Hawaii may happen, we never, no never, will permit any one to scratch it entirely off the map.
I fain would say more, but we authors or authoresses, as the case may be, fear the sneers that people throw at us,
And they might say I was more of a jingo than a poetess.
To much wonderment at congress people give expression,
Some for its breadth of mind and more for its length of session.
I, for one, shall be there, if I can possibly get away, to see those great men meet and mingle,
Most of them married, but some few single.
On looking the assemblage over I find
That it is made up of gentlemen of all kinds.
Some shave regular and are fashion's glass

Winter Underwear.

Opinions differ as to the comfort derived from the different materials from which underwear is made, but there is one thing which admits of no doubt, and that is that while silk is exceedingly warm, soft and pleasant to the flesh it is at the same time by no means the healthiest substance for the undergarment. In proof of this practical observation has demonstrated that silk stockings will make the toughest and healthiest feet moist, wet and tender, until walking becomes painful. A silk scarf worn around the neck next to the skin will in nine wearers out of ten produce sore throat. Silk makes the neck hot and moist, and the first stray breath of cool air that strikes the skin feels like a drop of iced water and will produce a cold. Silk seems to have the faculty, as contrasted with wool, of opening the pores and inciting perspiration, and if it will do this with the feet and neck there is every reason to believe that it will produce equal susceptibility to cold when worn about the chest and limbs. Those who wear silk stockings invariably have tender feet.

The rule that applies to the male applies equally to the female. Silk underclothing may be very comfortable, but perhaps the advocates of dress reform would do as much good if they would discuss carefully the hygienic value of the material, as well as the cut and style of the undergarment. — New York Ledger.

Negroes With Red Hair.

"A man sees lots of funny things while traveling around the country, but the most peculiar sight I ever saw was in Omaha the last time I was there," said Charles Killinger of Cincinnati. "While walking along the street there recently I saw two negroes with hair as red as any red hair you ever saw. It was as kinky as the negro wool usually is. It was a funny sight, and I stopped to look at them as they went down the street. A friend of mine who resides there told me those negroes had come from the south some years ago, and, as far as he knew, were full blooded darkies. Six fingered people are not uncommon, but for freaks those darkies took the cake."—Denver Republican.

From east and west we gathered in one crew
The restless and unruly of the world.
The stars laughed from the banner we unfurled.
We were stout hearts, boon spirits, tried and true.

For it was ours, from utmost isles impearled
In storm or sea, where wave and tempest swirled,
To fetch for man a lost and priceless clew.
And still, for many a day, our mighty bark
With roar and deific onward o'er the deep,
And we, at dawn, with anxious vision scan
Each new horizon, lifted from the dark,
For glorious lands which have liberty in keep—
The Golden Fleece which we must win for man.

A MINISTER'S STORY

Rev. F. Elliott, of Richmond Hill, Relates a Happy Incident.

Held Bedfast by Kidney Trouble—He Could Not Turn Himself—Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Him—"A Good, Honest, Reliable Medicine."

RICHMOND HILL, Feb, 7th—Rev F. Elliott, a popular and prominent clergyman of this place, has written the story of his sufferings and recovery from Kidney Disease. The sketch is of deep interest to thousands of Canadians.

Rev. Mr. Elliott says he feels it his duty to tell of the medicine that cured him—Dodd's Kidney Pills. Only "goodwill to men" could induce him to allow his name to be published in this connection. The testimonial is entirely unsolicited.

"I suffered so severely from Lame Back that I could not turn, nor get out of bed. I began using Dodd's Kidney Pills, and my pains and lameness soon disappeared. I consider Dodd's Kidney Pills a good, honest, reliable medicine for the diseases they are recommended for."

These are Mr. Elliott's own words, and such is the result every time Dodd's Kidney Pills are used. Any person who suffers from Bright's Disease, Diabetes, or any other Kidney Trouble, after having the assurance of such a worthy and eminent clergyman as Rev. Mr. Elliott, deserves no pity. The cure is within easy reach, and if they refuse to stretch out a hand to grasp it, no one can be blamed but themselves.

Dodd's Kidney Pills positively and permanently cure Lumbago, Dropsy, Paralysis, Heart Disease, Gout, Sciatica, Gravel, Stone in Bladder, Female Weakness, all urinary disorders. Neuralgia, Lame Back, and all other Kidney Diseases. They are the only remedy on earth that has ever cured Bright's Disease and Diabetes. They are sold by all druggists, or will be sent on receipt of price, fifty cents a box, six boxes for $2.50, by The Dodds Medi-

THE MOON OR THE SUN?

Which It Was the Besotted Stranger Could Not Tell.

Since the big trot has been in progress at the Louisville Driving and Fair association track the town has been a little fuller than usual of people, and, sad to relate, some at least of the people have been "a little fuller than usual." Two of the people were staggering down Green street late the other night, and one of them, seeing the electric light at the Jefferson street crossing, remarked:

"It's getting late. Just look how low the moon is."

"Why, you fool," responded his companion, "that's the sun."

This brought on a heated discussion that nearly resulted in a personal encounter, which was finally averted when one of the men proposed to bet $5 that he was right.

"Here's th' money," said he. "You hol' stakes."

"All right," said his companion. "I betcher. Here's my money. You hol' stakes. How're we goin to settle it?"

It was finally determined to leave it to the first man who passed, and after waiting for a quarter of an hour, during which the argument waxed hot and the participants became belligerent, finally another besotted individual came along claiming all sides of the road.

"Look here, m' friend," said one of the two, slapping him on the shoulder.

"All right," with a Fizsimmons pose, came the reply, "if yer want ter fight sail in. I'm ready fer yer."

"You are mistaken," said the first speaker. "I beg your pardon. Didn't mean no harm. We had'er bet an want you ter settle it. Is that the sun er the moon?"

The stranger felt his importance, and gazed long and earnestly, shading his eyes with his hands.

"You'll have ter excuse me, gents," he said, "I dunno."

Then he added apologetically, "Yer see I'm a stranger here myself."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Firmly Grounded Upon Real Merit —They Know Hood's Sarsaparilla Absolutely and Permanently Cures When All Others Fail.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is not merely a simple preparation of Sarsaparilla, Dock, Stillingia and a little Iodide of Potassium. Besides these excellent alteratives, it also contains those great anti-bilious and liver remedies, Mandrake and Dandelion. It also contains those great kidney remedies, Uva Ursi, Juniper Berries, and Pipsissewa.

Nor are these all. Other very valuable curative agents are harmoniously combined in Hood's Sarsaparilla and it is carefully prepared under the personal supervision of a regularly educated pharmacist.

Knowing these facts, is the abiding faith the people have in Hood's Sarsaparilla a matter of surprise? You can see why Hood's Sarsaparilla cures, when other medicines totally, absolutely fail.

GRAHAM'S ISLAND.

BY CHARLES B. LEWIS.

We had called at Mauritius on our way from Liverpool to Bombay in the ship Farewell and were five days out from the island when the adventure occurred by which we lost the captain and laid the foundation for this story. It was 3 o'clock in the afternoon of a bright day, and the ship was not making above four knots an hour. What sea there was on would not have bothered a quarter boat, and the ship lifted to a wave only at long intervals. The second mate and I were superintending some work forward, while the captain was alone on the quarter deck. All of a sudden and without the slightest warning the sea began to boil and heave under and around us in the most violent manner, and for five minutes every man had to hold on for his life. In her pitching the craft shipped three or four green seas, which swept the decks of everything movable. We were congratulating ourselves that all had escaped when the captain was found to be missing. The last wave we shipped had no doubt carried him away, and by the time we had come to this conclusion it was too late to make any move.

The sea had been disturbed by an earthquake. Just where we were when the agitation began the chart showed the depth to be a full mile. Three months later, when soundings were taken by a French vessel, it was found that a mountain two miles in circumference at the base had been heaved up until its crest was only 40 feet below the surface. The set of wind and wave before and after the agitation was to the westward, and ten minutes after the ship had come back to a level keel the wind changed to the east and blew half a gale for the next seven hours. As a matter of record, the ship pursued her voyage and made the port of Bombay without further adventure, and the remainder of the story relates to the captain. He was swept overboard by the last wave, just as we concluded, and presently found himself far to leeward among a lot of spars and casks which the same wave had taken from the main deck. While the man seized a spar and passed a lashing around his body he had no hope of rescue.

Almost before he realized his position the ship was a mile away, and he felt sure that no boat would be lowered to make a search for him. The spar to which he was lashed drifted away to the west, and evening came on. Between 5 o'clock and sunset four ships passed [illegible] the captain found a rude shelter which the man had used, and among the dried grass forming his bed were a few fragments of cloth which had once been a pea jacket. There were also a sailor's pipe and an empty tobacco box. Living there alone for years and years, with neither the note of a bird or the chirp of a cricket to cheer him, the man had lost his mind and, looking upon Captain Graham as an intruder, had meant to take his life.

When the castaway had been a month on the island without sighting a sail, he made up his mind that the fate of the poor fellow who had dashed into the sea would some day be his. He felt that he would lose his mind unless he made an effort to divert it from the gloomy situation, and he began a closer survey of the island. The center of it was considerably higher than elsewhere, and exactly in the middle was a single tree, surrounded by a thicket which he had never yet penetrated. In carrying out his explorations he entered this copse, finding a hard beaten path, evidently made by a crazy man. Piled up at the roots of the tree the captain found a great stock of small iron bound boxes, and it needed but one glance to satisfy him that they were treasure boxes. There was the cavity where they had once been buried, and the boxes were weather beaten as if long exposed. Two or three large shells lay about, which had doubtless been used to dig out the dirt, and one of the boxes had been opened.

The captain shouldered this box and carried it down to the spot he called "home," and there inspected its contents. It contained about $6,000 in gold coin of all nations, but principally English, and not a coin among them was of recent date. In fact, there were some which no longer circulated in England or India. From the material and construction the captain judged that the boxes had been made by a ship's carpenter. In the pile at the foot of the tree were 15 other boxes of the same size. One was broken open, and its contents found to be the same as the first and the amount very nearly the same. There was a total, as the captain figured, of $100,000 more or less. This was based on the supposition that all the boxes contained gold, but as he looked into only two he could not be sure of the contents of the others. How came the treasure there? Captain Graham believed it to be a pirate's cache and that the gold had been there long years before he was thrown on the beach. Perhaps the mad sailor had been one of the pirate crew. It was certain that he had unearthed the treasure at any rate, and it was hardly probable that he stumbled upon it by accident.

Well, there was a big fortune there, and it belonged to the finder, but it might have been so much sand for all the good it could do him. Days and weeks and months passed away, and one day the castaway counted up the pebbles he had laid in rows along the beach to mark the time and found that he had been 11 months on the island.

On that day there came a furious gale from the east, with a very high tide, and from some wreck at sea the waves brought in a vast quantity of stuff. There was nothing to eat or to wear among the wreckage, but there were planks and spars and a carpenter's tool chest, and as soon as the storm had abated the castaway went to work to build him a raft. He had determined to leave the island at any hazard, and after four or five days' work he had his raft completed. It was a rude but stout affair. Wild fruits were taken for provisions, and fresh water was carried in a wine keg which had come ashore with the wreckage. From one of the boxes the captain took $500 in goldpieces, and one morning when the wind was from the west he launched his raft and drifted off before it. By his reckoning, which was probably correct, it was seven days before he was picked up by the John J. Speed, an American merchant vessel, homeward bound.

The raft had made good weather of

A NURSE'S STORY.

Tells how she was cured of Heart and Nerve Troubles.

The onerous duties that fall to the lot of a nurse, the worry, care, loss of sleep, irregularity of meals soon tell on the nervous system and undermine the health. Mrs. H. L. Menzies, a professional nurse living at the Corner of Wellington and King Streets, Brantford, Ont., states her case as follows: "For the past three years I have suffered from weakness, shortness of breath and palpitation of the heart. The least excitement would make my heart flutter, and at night I even found it difficult to sleep. After I got Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills I experienced great relief, and on continuing their use the improvement has been marked until now all the old symptoms are gone and I am completely cured."

Bill Stickers.

The bill stickers of England are forming themselves into a billposting association, with a capital of $1,000,000. This calls up a joke about bill stickers much enjoyed by the English. A countryman, innocent of city snares, came to London for the first time. His name happened to be Bill Stickers. In the suburbs he saw a sign posted up which fairly made cold chills run down his spine, "Bill Stickers, Beware." Terrified nearly to death, he went on a little farther, when his gaze fell upon, "Bill Stickers, if Caught, Will Be Arrested Immediately." This was too much, and the affrighted Bill Stickers set out for home as fast as his legs could carry him. —Exchange.

THE MAN HE [illegible]

BAD ED WANTED THE EDITOR WHO WROTE HIM UP.

He Had Three Pistols, a Hunting Knife and Other Weapons, and the Editor Naturally Quaked In His Shoes—How the Bad Man's Character Was Rehabilitated.

One day George Ifft, who publishes a very warm paper in a damp basement in Pocatello, was over in the neighborhood of Ross Fork when one of the seven men who had been very intently regarding him from the front of the saloon across the way walked over toward him. In that part of the country, where, owing to the frequency of reports of Indian hostilities, every man went armed, Ifft would have paid no attention to one revolver and a winchester, but this man had three pistols, a hunting knife and a thing that looked like a slungshot, as well as the regularly ordained rifle.

"Mister," he said, addressing Ifft, "the boy behind the bar says you print the paper down at Pocatello."

"One of them," Ifft answered, wishing he knew what was about to happen.

"A paper down at Pocatello," said the walking artillery battery, "some time ago alluded to me when I went down there as a witness in the court as havin killed three men in Texas an as bein wanted by Pinkertons for various offenses."

6 o'clock and sunset four ships passed the drifting man, but all too far away to see or hear, and when night came down he felt that there was no longer the slightest chance for him. He drifted to the westward, as I have told you, but how far has never been known. Night passed and another day came, and toward the close of that day Captain Graham lost consciousness. He may have drifted a day after that—perhaps two days. When he came to his senses again, he was lying on a sandy beach, with his feet in the water. He had been cast ashore on an island. It was surely an island to the north and west of Madagascar, but for reasons which will be explained later on it cannot be more definitely located. For an hour after opening his eyes the man could not unlash himself from the spar. When he had finally accomplished that object, he had to crawl on hands and knees to reach the shade of the bushes. It was high noon and the weather hot, and the captain was so exhausted that if he had not found fresh water and wild fruit at hand he must have perished. He ate and drank his fill and then slept, and the sun was just rising next morning when he awoke.

The island, when the castaway came to survey it, was about two miles and a half long by one mile in breadth, and its average height above the sea was not over 15 feet. It was of volcanic origin and was entirely covered with verdure, and there were six or seven different sorts of wild fruits. Along the beach were oysters and shellfish in abundance, and the captain soon assured himself that starvation would not be one of the perils of his situation. What struck him curiously was the entire absence of life on the island. There was neither animal nor bird, reptile nor insect. There should have been a dozen varieties of birds and an abundance of insect life on so fair a spot with its tropical climate, but it was simply tenantless. And yet there was life there, and where the castaway least expected. He had been on the island a week or so and had twice walked clear around it when one day as he was gathering fruit in an open spot he was suddenly and fiercely attacked by a naked man. The surprise was great, and the captain had not yet recovered his strength, but, shaking the man off, he seized a club and laid about him so vigorously that his assailant ran away.

It was a white man, and from the marks on his hands he must have been a sailor. How long he had lived there and how he reached the island in the first place are matters for conjecture, but the fact of his being nude went to show that he had been there long enough to wear out his clothes. In breaking away from the captain he ran for the beach. The latter followed at his heels, shouting for him to stop, but the unknown ran to the water, plunged in and swam straight out to sea, looking back now and then and seeming to be in a terrible fright. He held to his course until he could no longer be seen, and there was no doubt he went to his death, as he did not return. In a dense

The raft had made good weather of it, drifting most of the time to the east, and the captain judged her total drift to have been 160 miles. His loss had been alluded to in the newspapers and talked of among sailors, and he was given a hearty welcome aboard the American. He related his adventures in full, except as to the treasure, and in due time was landed at Cape Town. He had figured out the latitude and longitude of his island to his own satisfaction, but the chart on board the Speed failed to show any such island. Captain Graham at once set about finding a ship to bring the treasure off. A brig was finally chartered and sailed with him aboard, but after a cruise of months she failed to find the island. Where Captain Graham said the island ought to be had found bottom at 40 feet, and in the immediate neighborhood a mass of trees and bushes was found floating about.

Village Overrun With Skunks.

Clinton, N. Y., furnishes good trapping ground for fur hunters. On and near the premises of one residence in Prospect street six large skunks were recently killed. In fact, the whole village seems to be overrun with the nuisance. Pedestrians avoid some streets altogether in fear of meeting the odorous noctural travelers. It has been suggested that the village fathers offer a bounty on every one killed. The skin brings a good price, and those who care to make a little money could find a chance in trapping—Utica Observer.

Unconscious Cerebration.

"Here is something which interests me," said the solemn faced man, "and that seemed quite wonderful too. I had gone out before breakfast, as I commonly do, to give myself the pleasure of a breath of fresh air. Just as I started off from my front door I met a man coming along without a collar on. Before I realized it my arm had started up for my neck to see if I had a collar on. As a matter of fact, I hadn't, and I suppose that the failure to put one on at the usual time had left me peculiarly sensitive to impressions about collars. But what interested me particularly was this:

"The impression in this case, taken through the eye, was conveyed to the muscles of my arm before it was to my consciousness. My arm realized it before my mind did; my hand started independently to find out whether I did have a collar on, and it had moved at least six inches from my side up toward my neck before I—that is to say, my thinking part—realized what it was moving for.

"I let it go on up, however, now under my control and direction; but, honest, I hated to boss it over such an intelligent

But He Was Too Blamed Peart to Joggle Around on Top of This Earth, and the Bull Tossed Him Up the Golden Stairs Old Carter's Meanness.

I was strolling through the country graveyard on top of the hill when I was joined by an old man, who opened a conversation and presently said:

"That grave over thar is whar my son Sam lies buried. I never got no headstun yit, but I'm goin to sum day."

"So you've lost a son?" I said by way of saying something.

"Yes, lost him two y'ars ago. Sam was a powerful peart young man, he was. 'Deed, but he died of too much peartness. Might hev bin livin today if he'd heeded his father."

"Did Sam meet with an accident?"

"Sorter accident, I reckon. Man on the next farm to us had a big bull, and that bull wasn't afeared of anything on this airth. When he got mad, he'd go fur a tree or a stun wall as quick as anything else. One day he got to riprorin, and as thar wasn't anybody around to go fur he made fur a big rock in the field. He didn't knock his horns off, as you might reckon on, but he struck sich a blow with his head that his neck bent around to the left. When he had carried it that way fur a week or two, Sam says to me one day:

"'Pop, if somethin hain't dun fur that bull he'll soon hev his head over his tail.'

"'What kin be dun?' says I.

"'Why, it wants somebody to take him by the horns and gin him a twist to straighten his neck back.'

"'But don't you go to foolin with him. If old Carter wants to twist his bull's neck back into shape, let him go ahead, but we ar' a fam'ly as don't own any critters and don't take no chances.'

"Sam didn't say nuthin to that," continued the old man, "but I mistrusted he wanted to try a twist. We was workin in the next field that day, and I kept my eye on him fur an hour or two. Then he suddenly throws down his hoe and cracks his heels together and hollers:

"'Pop Saunders, I'm fur twistin that neck back, and nobody kin stop me. I'm ag'in the critter in a way, but I ain't goin to stand by and see him lose his peartness. I'll straighten his neck with one twist.'

"I argued and argued, but Sam was so powerful peart that thar was no stoppin him. He climb the fence and spit on his hands and went fur the bull, and that bull knowed he was goin to do him good and never bellered a beller or pawed a paw. Sam got hold of either horn, drawed a long breath and then gin the critter sich a twist that he was throwed clean over on the other side. Sam was hollerin and wavin his hat when the bull got up. His neck was as straight as a bee line ag'in, but he was mad about being twisted. I hollered to Sam to look out fur a calamity, but while he was crackin his heels and whoopin the bull made fur him and picked him up."

"And he was killed?" I said.

"Jest killed so dead that a grin was left on his face to bury him with, and he had bin dead ten minits befo' he stopped whoopin. He'd made that twist all right and proper, but he didn't count on gittin away. Yes, sah, jest died of too much peartness, and, shuck his pesky hide, if ole Carter didn't want $20 of me fur damages. He was countin on sellin that bull with a men in Texas an as been wanted by Pinkertons for various offenses."

"When was that?" the editor faltered.

"In March of last year."

"I came to Pocatello in September," Ifft said, much relieved.

The man with the weapons looked disappointed.

"Shucks!" he ejaculated. "You don't say. Ain't that disapp'intin now? Sure you didn't come in Febiwary, mister?"

"My dear friend, I assure you that I didn't, and in any event I should not have published such"—

"Hold on, mister, hold on. Don't talk so fast. A man down in Pocatello who prints a paper said them things about me, and I judge"—

"But surely you don't hold me responsible for what a libeler and a perjurer and a base assassin of character says, do you?"

"Mister," the other said gladly, "by them words I know you're just the man I want. Now don't git skeered. You don't understand me. I'm Ed Hawkins, an I've got a reputation as a bad man in these parts."

"I shouldn't think so, Mr. Hawkins. I"—

"Not Mr. Hawkins, but Ed. Bad Ed, if you please. Yes, sir, I've got a reputation fer bein a killer, but betwixt you an me I ain't. Nat'rally I'm peaceable an calm, an I wouldn't do nothin serious ag'in the law if I was paid fer it. But as long's I'm Bad Ed I'm an honored citizen an I git free liquor all I please. Things was gittin a little bit dubious with me, an folks was wonderin why I didn't do some shootin awhile ago, but when that Pocatello paper came out an said what I'd did in Texas respect an esteem come back to me on a gallop. That paper statement of my badness has kep' me goin fer 18 months, but the boys is kinder worryin ag'in an intimatin that I never had a sheriff after me in my life, an that Bill Pinkerton don't give a cuss where I am hidin. Now, sir, if you will kindly step acrost the way an inform these people that I am not only what you said a year ago last March"—

"But I didn't write it and"—

"No, of course not. But, blame it all, man, can't you p'tend when another man's happiness is at stake? You say that you did, an that I am all that you wrote at the time of that trial, an that I also am the things you said a few minutes ago. Do it, mister, an patch up my record as a bad man. An here's $2 fer your trouble. You can send me your paper."

So Ifft went over and rehabilitated Bad Ed Hawkins' character for him, and after taking one fearful drink with the killer he broke for his train, which was pulling in. A few minutes later he looked back from the rear platform and saw Mr. Hawkins violently firing two revolvers and chasing a very small Chinaman down one street while the townspeople fled for safety, and he knew that Bad Ed was putting the finishing touches to a demonstration which would keep him in honors for at least another year.—Chicago Record.

THE CATTLE KINGS.

ONCE A GREAT POWER IN THE WEST, THEY ARE NOW DISPLACED.

Small Stock Raisers Have Driven Out the Larger Ones—Big Ranges and Water Holes Fenced In—How the Bonanz Cattle Outfits Made Enormous Profits.

The great cattle ranges of western North Dakota and Montana, where for nearly 20 years, the bonanza cattle outfits have held complete sway, and where cattle have roamed the vast prairies at will, like the buffalo a quarter of a century ago, are passing out of existence.

The deathknell of the large cattle companies has been sounded by the innumerable settlers who have taken up vacant government land in the great grazing region, built "shanties" in the vicinity of every natural spring and water hole, fenced in thousands of acres of grazing land and driven the immense herds of the bonanza cattlemen from place to place, until there is no place left for them to go. All the years that the vast prairies of the west have remained unsettled have been worth millions to the cattle princes. Hundreds of thousands of cattle have been imported, placed upon the ranges at a cost not to exceed $16 a head for the 2-year-old steers, allowed to roam at will for two years, at an average animal cost not to exceed $3, and then sold in the market at Chicago for an average price of $45 to $50. The free ranges offered by the millions of acres of unsurveyed and unoccupied government land have been turned into millions of dollars in cold cash by the cattle kings, but the tide of immigration to the west has sealed their fate and they are ready to go.

For 20 years nearly a vast region lying along the western part of North Dakota and the eastern strip of Montana measuring 100 miles in width and 150 miles in length has been entirely given up to the interests of the cattle kings. Thousands of head of cattle have been grazed year after year, countless trainloads of beeves have been shipped to market and millions of dollars have room for their thousands of beeves. Fifteen thousand cattle, the property of one of the larger operators, succumbed to the severity of the weather for no other reason than that the ranges had been denuded of grass by the numerous smaller ranchmen. This was a warning that the most obstinate must heed. And so the cattle companies that formerly numbered their possessions by the thousands of head may now number them easier in hundreds. The small ranchman is the man upon whom the market of the future must rely for its beef.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

It Was a Draw.

Pete Whiston was about the gamest fellow of all the smooth chaps that were doing business at Leadville when it was the liveliest place on earth. He was little and dressed like a fashion plate, but he had a pair of eyes that would bore holes in you and could pull quicker'n a rattle can kick.

Pete put himself on record right from the start. He came on the ground a week before a couple of tenderfoot from the east got up a heated game of billiards. Of course it made the boys lively, and the boys all thought they had a couch when Pete, who was new to them, broke into the play and went to puttin up all kinds of money that the game would be a draw. The idea of a draw in a billiard contest was so ridiculous that the fellows thought Pete must be crazy, but there seemed to be no bottom to his pile, and it did the talkin.

It all came out afterwards. Pete went to one of the players and gave him $500 to throw the game. Then he made the same kind of a deal with the other one, warnin both that there would be a killin if the agreement was not carried out. You

It may be the years are all somber and dark,
But the clouds will, sometime, drift away,
And the sunlight of gladness
Shine out from the blue
For you, brother, sometime, some day.

There is never a rose so fragrant and fair,
That the thorns are not somewhere about it.
And into each life some shadow must come.
No life is complete without it.

Then keep a brave heart as the battle goes on Remembering ever, alway,
That for every night
Of sorrow and blight
Will be given a bright, glad day.

TRIAL BY FIRE.

There are colonels and majors and generals and some old captains who hold that Isabel Hampden was the most attractive woman who ever graced the frontier, and in their time most women seemed attractive because of their scarcity. She was handsome and accomplished and clever and something more than all these which was inexplicable, but very potent. She had been brought up in garrisons and large cities, and by the time she was two and twenty she knew the world rather well. Moreover, she knew men—not girls and women, but men.

Because she had been allowed to live in posts during most of what should have been her boarding school days and because she was pleasant to look upon and to converse with at an age when most girls are impossible, men had fallen in love with her pretty much ever since she could remember. It was said that she had refused all the bachelors in all the frontier regiments. This was not far from the truth. A woman who had married one of the rejected ones said that refusing was a habit Miss Hampden had formed, and that it began to look as if she might never break herself of it. In the nature of things this was repeated to the girl. Her good temper was one of her charms. "It is so much better a habit than accepting them all," she argued sweetly. Nevertheless, she wondered if there were not some truth mingled with the malice.

But Lieutenant Loring was the last victim of her practice. He proposed to her, unfortunately for himself, just after she had met young Ardsley.

"I thought this morning that maybe I would marry you," said Miss Hampden. "But I've changed my mind some way."

Loring was accustomed to a great deal of frankness from her, but it clashed with his notions of feminine modesty for a woman to have entertained thoughts of marriage before the offer thereof.

"Weren't you just a trifle prompt in determining my intentions?" he asked.

"Has the event proved me wrong?" she returned.

He lost his temper. "You are spoiled," he said.

"If you knew how often I have heard that! Yet I do not think I am. I am simply sincere, and you are a little too vain, all of you, to grasp the difference. I like you awfully well—no, now, don't misunderstand me. I don't love you, and you are too nice a fellow to be married to a girl who only likes you. No," she repeated, "I do not think I'm spoiled. I am not agitated and tearful as I ought to be, perhaps, under the circumstances. I used to be, but I've passed that. I have been so placed that men were making love to me at an age when other girls were playing with dolls. It's partly because I am pretty and partly, largely, because there are so few women out here. When I have been in the east, I haven't made much of a sensation. I've grown a bit hardened, perhaps. Custom has dulled the edge—which was fearfully keen and cutting at first—of being told that I am breaking a heart. But though I am only 22 I've lived to see dozens of you marry and be happy. You'll do the same."

"Oh, no, I shall not!" moaned Loring.

Death's Betrothal.

A few years ago a New York newspaper conducted an open discussion upon the topic: "Is Marriage a Failure?" The answer is easy and upon the surface. Where there is mutual love and respect, if there is also health, marriage is a success. When health is left out, even the most ardent love does not count, and marriage is invariably a failure.

Modern science has cried the warning so often that all should realize the dangers of wedlock to people in ill-health. In a case of this kind death lurks on every side—in the kiss of betrothal and the caress of the honeymoon. The man who is suffering from ill-health is a physical bankrupt, and has no right to condemn a woman to be his nurse for life and the mother of babes that inherit his physical weakness. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery acts directly on the digestive organism. It makes it strong and its action perfect. When a man's digestion is all right his blood will be pure; when his blood is pure his nervous system will be strong and his health vigorous.

A woman who suffers from weakness and disease of the delicate organism of her sex is certain to suffer from general ill-health, and to be an unhappy, helpless invalid and a disappointment as a wife. Her children will be weak, puny and peevish. A happy home is an impossibility for her until her health is restored. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures all troubles of the distinctly feminine organism. It cures them speedily, completely and permanently. It fits for wifehood and motherhood. Both medicines are sold by all good dealers.

army: he asked as they walked home.

"Not quite."

"The entire department?"

"Well, a fair percentage of it," she admitted.

"Are you going to refuse me?"

"I can't say until you are offered."

"I offer myself now."

"And I accept you now."

"Good enough. Will you announce our engagement tonight at supper?"

"At the risk of being adjudged insane—yes."

"Put on this ring until I can get you another. Your hands are not small. It will fit your middle finger. Now I am in earnest."

"So am I," she said.

They were very much in earnest, the event proved, and the garrison derived unmixed pleasure from the total, unconditional, obvious surrender of Miss Hampden. She was as open in her infatuation as she had always been in everything else. And Ardsley was equally infatuated. He took back the class ring and gave her a diamond which cost him three months' pay. They were altogether happy. So, just a fortnight before the day arranged for their wedding, the gods demanded the first payment on their loan.

Ardsley was ordered off on a scout. Miss Hampden was the sort of girl who might have been expected to take this reasonably. But she did not. She clung to Ardsley and cried like any little girl and did not behave in the least like a woman who had seen countless scouts. And she let him go to the wars remembering her standing with her arm against the wall and her head upon her arm, sobbing as if her heart were utterly broken. He himself was moved and stern. Loring would have liked to remind her that hearts which were really wrung did not show their pain. He had not yet recovered.

Ardsley did not come back from the scout. He was in a fight on what should have been his wedding day. Others were killed and their bodies were recovered and buried, but Ardsley's body was never found. There was a tale that a fire had been seen on the battlefield the night after the encounter and in the grazed year after year, countless trainloads of beeves have been shipped to market and millions of dollars have gone into the pockets of the cattlemen. Pierre Wiebaux, the Montana stockman, said to be the largest single owner of cattle in the United States, has numbered his total possessions of cattle at 50,000 head. The Berry-Boice Cattle company has owned and grazed each year not fewer than 30,000 head, and there are numerous companies that have essayed to keep on the ranges an annual total of from 10,000 to 35,000 head. The vastness of the business of these cattle companies may be estimated from the fact that the annual shipments for the past few years have been from 3,000 to 6,000 head for each of the large companies. The annual profits of the larger companies, after deducting the original cost of the cattle and the cost of their maintenance upon the ranges, are from $75,000 to $150,000—all that from the free ranges of the government, given without taxation or any return whatever.

To understand the situation that has existed up to the present time it must be remembered that this broad region which has been given up to the interests of the cattle growers has not been intersected by a fence, disturbed with a plow or graced with a field of grain up to a few short years ago—nothing for miles but short nutritious grass, which cured on the prairie, as clover in a stack, and served equally well for food in dead of winter as in the heat of summer.

Forth upon this vast area every spring have been poured streams of gaunt, ill shaped, long horned and lean ribbed southern cattle. Left to roam at will, they have thriven and waxed fat, until in two years they have become sleek and fat and comely to the eye. During all that period they have been as free and untrammeled as were ever the buffalo. But at the close of the maturing period they have been rounded up, driven to railroad stock shipping pens and loaded upon the cars for a trip to market. Their places are taken by fresh importations from the south. And so, year after year, have the processes been repeated, until the profits that were known to have accrued from the business have tempted thousands of small holders of cattle to settle in this region and engage in the beef business on a smaller scale.

The presence of these smaller operators is the inevitable doom of the cattle kings. Their vast herds are no longer allowed to roam the ranges undisturbed. The small ranchmen have built fences and inclosed the water holes. The prairies have been made to yield to the mowing machine, and the former tree grass has come to be cut and stacked as hay, until the ranges in many places are bare of feed for the herds of the larger companies. These conditions are responsible for the closing out of the cattle princes. There is no longer same kind of a deal with the other one, warning both that there would be a killin if the agreement was not carried out. You never saw a funnier game. Each tried to throw it. Neither knew that the other was under contract to do so. They played worse than amateurs, were nervous and looked at Pete, who sat there with a hand in each hip pocket and looking like a tiger ready to spring. At 100 points they were a tie. One of them pretended to be sick, and the other led him into a side room. Ten minutes later it was discovered that they had fled. "I declare all bets"—began the referee. "I declare this here game a draw," he concluded, for he had caught the eye of Pete, who appeared to be examining his gun.—Detroit Free Press.

"Oh, no, I shall not!" moaned Loring.

"Oh, yes, you will, Jack, and I shan't mind! Now I've promised to dance this with the new Mr. Ardsley, and if we stay out here any longer every one will guess what has happened."

"They'll know when they see me."

"Don't be a goose, Jack. It's only the heart that is trying to take itself seriously that exhibits the pain."

"Don't discuss a subject you know nothing about. You have no heart."

He left her with an exaggerated bow as young Ardsley came up.

As Miss Hampden waltzed off with Ardsley she knew that Loring was wrong; that this tall boy, fresh from West Point, as new in experience of the world as the brass buttons on his blouse, was the man she was going to love. He would love her, of course. It is to be feared that it did not enter her head that he might not. She liked his strong, rough cut face, and his jolly, stone gray eyes, and his drawling, heavy voice, and his waltzing, and the way he held her. After the dance she determined that she liked his hands, and when she looked at them she saw a ring.

"Is that your class ring?" she said.

"Yes," he told her.

"May I see it?"

He gave it to her, and while she examined it he sat and admired her. On his part he liked the women who carried themselves haughtily; he liked tall women; he liked straight black hair and olive skin and dark eyes and large features and a neck of statuesque proportions. In short, he liked exactly the things he had never fancied up to then. Miss Hampden raised her eyes and met his. She smiled, but it was like no smile she had ever bestowed on a man before. He looked at her very gravely, and her hand closed tightly over the ring. In a moment she was studying it again.

"I like this. It's unusual," she said.

"I am glad you think so, as I conceived the design." He expected to be told that he was clever.

"Indeed!" was all she said, and that indifferently.

"How cool! I rather thought you'd express surprise and give me some credit. You are not addicted to flattery, it would seem."

"I am not. But I don't think it would have been flattering to be surprised that you have done it. It struck me as being quite the thing you would naturally do."

"That is very pretty."

"It is perfectly true."

It happened oddly enough that Ardsley chanced not to have heard of Miss Hampden's reputation by the next night. He was rudely awakened to a knowledge of it. There were private theatricals in the hoproom, and Miss Hampden was the leading lady. Now the suitor was quite recovered, and he meant to play a joke on those in the audience who were not—and these were some eight or ten, three of them married. He proposed to the heroine in nicely read lines and was rejected by her with a perfection that spoke her practice. So the audience thought, and it laughed. When the laugh had subsided, the hero arose from his knees. He walked to the footlights and sighed.

"Ah, well," he said, "I have one crumb of comfort—I am not the only man in this place who is in the same fix!"

The astounded Ardsley looked about him, and he picked out the entire number by their faces. Miss Hampden dropped her head in her hands and laughed with the rest.

Between the acts Ardsley made inquiries and learned the truth. He was bitten with a desire to obtain the unattainable, and he was not one to dally. He went behind the scenes.

"Whom are you going home with, Miss Hampden?" he asked.

"I fear no one will take me after the light Mr. Graves has put me in."

"May I do so?"

She nodded, and Ardsley went back to his seat.

er found. There was a tale that a fire had been seen on the battlefield the night after the encounter, and in the midst of the fire a tree with a form which might have been that of a man against it. There were Indians grouped around it. Miss Hampden never heard the story. She never even guessed at what had happened until 20 years afterward.

She was the superb and spiritless wife of a mighty general, and she was accompanying her husband on a tour of inspection in the west. They were at an agency one day and were visiting the tepees. It was the agency of the Indians that young Ardsley had fought two decades before, and the general's wife was nerving herself not to show that she remembered this.

The general was examining the trinkets that hung on a string around the neck of a half blind squaw.

"Here is a West Point class ring!" he exclaimed.

His wife repeated her words of 20 years past.

"May I see it?" she asked coolly.

She took it in her hands and turned it about. She could make out the design, though it seemed to have passed through some heat that had melted it. There was no doubt in her mind. Nevertheless she looked inside. The heat had not affected it there, and the initials were quite plain even yet.

"D. A.," she said. "It was David Ardsley's ring. The fire did not touch the letters. I understand now why they never could tell me which was his grave."

The general broke the string and picked up the class ring from among the scattered baubles. The squaw was chattering and whining and clawing around on the earth. The general held the ring out to his wife. She raised the dark eyes that had been so bright and happy the last time it had been held out to her.

"Can I have it?" she asked.

The general put it in her hand, and the hand closed over it.

"Thank you," she said.—Gwendolen Overton in San Francisco Argonaut.

The New Congressman.

His breast was filled with pride the day
He left for Washington.
The Jayville band turned out to play
For Jayville's favorite son.

The judge delivered a farewell speech.
With flags the town was gay.
There was nothing that seemed too high to reach
The day he went away.

The people cheered and the whistles blew,
And guns were fired for him,
And, at last, when the rushing train came through
The whole world seemed to swim.

But the president was not on hand
To meet him in Washington,
And he looked and listened for the band,
But it seemed that there was none.

So the man who had started out to sway
And to rule his fellow men
Slipped quietly into his seat next day,
And was never heard from again.

"Well, give me a bottle of gin, whiskey and appolinaris and I'll mix the drinks." finally remarked the first patron. After the men had taken three

Mr. Max Robinson, of Bath, inserted an advertisement in last week's Express calling upon the person "who by mistake changed overcoats, taking a blue beaver and leaving a black beaver, while attending the funeral of Mrs. Smith, of Hambugh," to return the same. The paragraph caught the eye of Mr. John Hill, of Napanee, who was just as anxious as Mr. Robinson to ascertain who had his overcoat, and ere this the exchange has no doubt been effected. Both were brand new overcoats of equal value, but Jack prefers his own coat as it is not quite so tight about the arm pits.

In Big Business.

Dr. Bradshaw, Wesley Schryver and Claude Chapman left for Watertown this week where they will appear as witnesses for the Rome, Ogdensburgh and Watertown Railway in the suit brought against that company by Col. Alex. McDonald, of Picton. It appears that Mr. McDonald accompanied the Orange excursion to Watertown last year. Mr. McDonald contends that while he was about to proceed from one car to another the train parted throwing him out of the car with great violence. He sustained serious injuries and claims substantial damages from the railway company. The railroad company claims that Mr. McDonald was standing on the platform of the train at the time and in consequence they are in no way responsible for the accident. The Napanee witnesses will give evidence to the effect that Mr. McDonald was not in the car, as he claims, but on the platform at the time the train parted. In empanelling the jury to try the case each juryman was asked the question if he had any prejudice against McDonald because he was a Canadian or an Orangeman.

Death of Dr. Freshman.

It is with regret we are called upon to chronicle the death of the Rev. Dr Jacob Freshman, which sad even occurred at his home in Buffalo on Wednesday, the 2nd inst Deceased had been ill with typhoid fever and his untimely demise will come in the nature of a shock to his many friends in this district. Dr. Freshman was the eldest son of the late Rev. Charles Freshman, D D, who located in Quebec as a Jewish Rabbi, became converted to the Christian faith through reading a New Testament, and was received into the Methodist church. Deceased, following in the footsteps of his father, also entered the ministry, filled charges in Eastern Ontario and Quebec, and remained until his health gave way. After a year's rest he resumed work among his own countrymen in New York City, where he labored successfully for about eighteen years. About three years ago he removed to Buffalo and entered into the regular work of the ministry. Deceased was thirty-two years of age and married Miss Emily, daughter of the late Chas. R. Miller, and sister of Mr. S. R. Miller and Mrs. James Daly, of Napanee. The remains were brought to Napanee and the funeral took place on Saturday from the residence of S. R Miller to the Eastern Methodist church and thence to the Napanee Cemetery.

A Good Match.

The Crystals, of Kingston, and the Tigers, of Napanee, came together at the Pollard & Wilson rink on Saturday evening last and a neat and interesting hockey match, plentifully sprinkled with brilliant plays, was the result. The teams were as follows: Napanee — McCoy, Pruyn, Briggs, Finkle, Burrows, Embury, Lafferty. Kingston — Mills, Bass. Mann, Graham, Mahood, Pennell, Robinson, Referee, F. Parker. In the first half honors were easy, Napanee scoring two goals and the Crystals one, but in the second half the Tigers scored three goals to their opponents nil, leaving the result five to one in Napanee's favor at the close.

Mr. Charles Stevens, sr., in his own happy, freckless, characteristic fashion proceeds to "rip things up the back," generally in the last issue of his "little paper." "Partizanship is king" says this energetic little man and by the same token he is the deuce. Mr. Stevens has a grievance, in fact he is never without one, and like the generality of people afflicted with this malady feels inclined to take the world, indiscriminately, into his confidence If Mr. Stevens' attack was confined to The Express we would treat it with the silent contempt that his egotistical effusions usually engender, but in justice to the honorable gentlemen who compose the County Council we desire to point out a few facts in connection with the awarding of the printing contract which were inadvertently omitted, no doubt, from Mr. Stevens' very exhaustive report. We would not accuse so honorable a man of purposely eliminating the facts referred to. Owing to the multifariousness of his duties it no doubt escaped his memory, prodigious though it be.

On Saturday, Jan. 29th, Mr. Stevens' sealed tender for the county printing was the only one before the council. A number of the councillors were in favor of deferring the consideration of the matter until the June session. In that case Mr. Stevens' tender would have gone into the hands of the Education and Printing Committee, and as it was the only tender there would have been no course open to the committee but to award the contract to him. Mr. Stevens would not hear to this but insisted on his tender being read in open council. Mr. Stevens, who is utterly without guile, feared, no doubt, that if he trusted his offer to the tender mercies of the Printing Committee the "extreme partizanship" of the members would induce them to "bunco" him out of it. The council then gave Mr. Stevens the privilege of withdrawing his tender. He insisted on it being opened and read. He offered to do the printing for the year for $400. As this took the matter entirely out of the hands of the Education and Printing Committee they took no action. In the afternoon Mr. John Pollard was awarded the contract for $300, he putting in a verbal tender in open council. Both Mr. Stevens and Mr. Tempeton were granted the privilege of putting in a tender after Mr Pollard if they so desired. This in brief is the true history of this famous case. The tirade printed in the "twinkler" is the fulfilment of a threat made by Mr. Stevens at the County Council of the dire things he would do in his 'little paper" if not awarded the contract.

In regard to Mr. Stevens' enquiry as to what became of the tender of the Peterboro Times, we have it on the authority of the County Clerk that no tender for county printing was received from that source.

The gentlemen composing the County Council are honorable men, and their desire is to award the county printing at a fair price equally among the town printing offices. They recognize that the newspapers are doing a good work and deserving of recognition The cost of the county printing in Lennox & Addington in comparison with other counties has been very moderate, and this year it is away down below zero.

The Express and the Beaver are legitimate newspaper enterprises and are not run as an annex to an ash business. If either one fails to make both ends meet out of their business they must go to the wall. So far as The Express is concerned it has arrived at the conclusion that so long as ashmen remain in the newspaper business printing must be marked down below cost. Mr. Stevens' "little paper" is circulated throughout the United States for the purpose of advertising his famous brand of unleached hardwood ashes, but cannot be looked upon as a legitimate local enterprise. Mr. Stevens' spleen was recently aroused against one of the printers in town and for that reason he has decided to submit the trade to guerilla warfare "to get even," confidently relying on his ash business to pay the shot. This is a "Don Quixote" course but is anything but a joke to the men who are carrying on a legitimate business and have no ash Klondike to fall back upon. If Mr. Stevens was gaining any thing by his "dog in the manger" proceedings, but the contempt of all honest men, there would be some reason in it. Last year Mr. Stevens received his fair share of the county printing, (over $211) considering the work he had to do. This year he was quite prepared to abide by the old arrangement entered into with the council until his spleen was aroused by a communication that appeared in the Beaver. In regard to Mr. Stevens' charge that W. D. Madden and E. S. Lapum

Mr. Harvey Warner furnished the children of the E. M. Sunday School, some two hundred in number, with tickets for the recent entertainment.

He is Irresponsible.

On Monday Chief of police Adams took Jim Rose into custody and he is now resting quietly in Castle Vanluven. Poor Jim is a little light in the top storey. He has been hanging around Yarker, Odessa and other places for some time past picking up a living, nobody knows how. On Monday he wandered into town with a pair of fine dogs, and a number of unplucked chickens with their necks wrung. Jim is not clear in his own mind where he secured the chickens and has told a variety of stories in reference to them. The chief has been unable to find an owner for the fowl as yet. Jim paid a visit to a school in this section recently, too, as he had a number of pens, some crayons and a neck scarf in his possession. He couldn't assign any reason for taking the pens or chalk, but the scarf he placed around his neck because he was cold. Of late Jim had been training his dogs in the teaming line by making them pull a heavy box through the snow, preparatory to embarking for the Klondike in the spring. He was remanded to gaol for eight days and in the meantime an effort will be made to have him placed in the House of Providence at Kingston.

Address and Presentation.

The "Sisters of Martha and Mary" at their last meeting presented their Treas., Mrs. W. D Madden, on the eve of her departure, with a beautiful gold ring on which was the word, "Sister," in raised letters, and the date of presentation on the inside, also the following address:

NAPANEE, 26th JAN. 1898.

MRS. W. D. MADDEN,

Dear Sister—As the time approaches for your removal from our midst we feel unwilling to let you depart from the post you have so well and faithfully occupied since the organization of this Sisterhood without giving some expression to our deep regret at the severance of those ties which have been so firmly cemented. It is impossible to part with one who has been so identified with us, not only as our treasurer, but as a co-worker in everything that pertained to the advancement of the work undertaken by the Sisters of Martha and Mary; without feeling the great loss we sustain. We not only contemplate the pleasant social relations of past association, but more especially do we now realize what it means to loose a true sister, one who chose "that better part" and endeared hereself to all by her many deeds of self sacrifice, where the heart, the head and the hands were so willingly employed in loving ministrations, as well as by her ready and wise council. As a parting gift we ask you to accept this ring as a slight token of our affectionate esteem. May it be to you not only a frequent reminder of former days spent with us in the Master's service, but also serve to move you to the performance of similar deeds wherever a Divine Providence may cast your lot. We sincerely hope that you, with your dear husband, may be spared many long years of happy usefulness. We assure you we will miss your assistance in our work, and your presence with us here, but earnestly pray that after this life's work is done "when the roll is called up yonder you'll be there."

Signed on behalf of the Sisters,

M. A. SHIRLEY, Directress.

Mahood and Pennell of the Crystal forward line played a beautiful combination game but their efforts to score were always frustrated by the Tigers stonewall defence. The Napanee juniors contented themselves with individual rushes, indulging in little or no combination play. Mills, in goal, played a magnificent game for the Crystals stopping many hard shots. At the conclusion of the match Mr. Herb Gibson entertained the members of both teams and a few of their friends to an oyster supper at Rikley's. The boys enjoyed the excellent spread provided and all joined in votting "Herb" a jolly good fellow.

HOCKEY NOTES.

Regiopolis College, Kingston, is anxious to get on a match with the Tigers hockey club, the match to be played at Napanee.

The Napanee Hockey Club and a number of their friends journeyed to Belleville on Tuesday to play a match with the team of that town, but it had to be declared off owing to the wet weather.

Picton defeated Belleville last week by 6 goals to 2, winning the Corby cup.

The Crystals who visited Napanee on Saturday, met defeat at the hands of the junior team, the score being 5 to 1 In every other respect, however, they received a most cordial reception, being entertained at an oyster supper after the game by their generous conquerors —Kingston Times.

The Monarch Hockey Club, "juniors of the juniors," journeyed to Deseronto on Saturday and were defeated by a score of 2 to 1. The Deseronto team were much heavier and the goal keeper sported whiskers.

A junior team from Napanee defeated Selby on Saturday by 2 to 1.

A game may be arranged with the Frontenac Hockey club of Kingston and Napanee Hockey club, to be played on the rink here, which is said to be one of the best lighted and largest in this part of the country.—Deseronto Tribune.

FAREWELL BANQUET TO W. D. MADDEN.

On Monday evening last the Liberal Conservative Association of Napanee tendered a farewell banquet to Mr. W. D Madden, who has left town with the idea of locating in the west. About fifty prominent gentlemen in the party were present, and a very pleasant evening was spent.

The Paisley House out-did itself in the matter of providing good things for the banquet, and the many and various dishes were so well served by the smiling goodnatured waitresses as to call forth special encomiums from all present. Dish after dish was handed round and the guests were so nicely importuned to try just this one more, that all were more than satisfied before yielding to nature's call for a respite.

The chairman, Dr. Meacham, proposed the first toast "The Queen," and spoke a few eloquent words in praise of Her Majesty as a queen, wife, and mother.

Mr. W. G. Wilson, the vice chairman, proposed "The Local Legislature." to which Dr. Meacham and Mr. Jno. T. Grange responded.

"Our Guest," W. D. Madden, Esq., was however the toast of the evening, and Dr. Meacham echoed the good wishes of all present, in the few well chosen words with which he proposed the toast.

Mr. Madden replied in the speech of the evening, and among other good things said "the remembrance of this evening will always be a green spot in my memory."

"The Learned Professions" was responded to by the Rev. Macdonald, and Messrs. W. H. Perry, G. F. Ruttan, Dr. Cowan, and A. R. Davis.

"The Press" was coupled with the names of Messrs. Pollard and Templeton, who both responded thereto.

"The Ladies" brought Messrs Alex. Karr and F. W. Smith to their feet, and the toast lost nothing of its charm in their hands.

The evening's enjoyment was much enhanced by the singing of the following gentlemen; D. Henwood, E. Graham, F Mabee, W. Mabee, and W. Bruton, who gave some very choice songs at intervals

It was an evening long to be remembered by all present.

If you feel weak, dull and discouraged you will find a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla will do you wonderful good.

offered him $100 if he would refrain from tendering for the County Printing in 1896 all we can say is that it is on a par with his other assertions. THE EXPRESS certainly was not a party to any such offer and his slanderous attempt to connect us with it by inference is an unqualified falsehood. Our own opinion is that no such offer was ever made. In conjunction with this we may say that Mr. E. S Lapum denies the allegation in toto. It is now in order for Mr. Stevens to take an oath as to the truthfulness of his statement, publish it in his "little paper" and then ascertain how many of the ash buyers who are the recipients of it will credit it.

Mr. Stevens' declaration that "he intends to stand by his guns like a True Jack Tar so long as the ship's decks are above water and any possibility of keeping his powder dry" is very piratical. He has hoisted the black flag, bid adieu to common-sense, and with revenge as his watchword and rancour as his battle-cry will war against legitimate enterprises and endeavor to besmirch honest men's reputations until his better nature asserts itself or his leaky old craft sinks beneath the waves.

We make the above observations undeterred by the fear of a special hedition, draped in mourning.

Grand Masquerade Carnival.

The first masquerade carnival of the season was held at the Pollard & Wilson rink on Friday evening. The weather, which had been blustery all the week, smiled auspiciously for the occasion, and the event proved a most successful and enjoyable one. The curling rink was thrown open for the convenience of skaters and the ice was in excellent condition. The Citizens' Band furnished excellent music during the evening. The maskers were numerous and the costumes pretty and attractive. The following is a list of the maskers: Willie Kent, My Sister; Cameron Lee, Newsboy; Bruce Gordon, Scotch Bugler; Percy Asselstine, Indian Chief; Algy Rockwell, Boy Belle; Frank Boyes, Le Trappeur; P Anderson, Robin Hood; Willie Savage, Snowflake; Bruce Williams, Dinah the Nigger Wench; Frank Rikley Clown; Miss Emma Scott, Snow Ball; Miss Gertrude Wager, Fairy; Miss Nellie Madden, Japanese Lady; Miss Grace Harrison, Queen of the Mohawks; Miss Mabel Mills, Pop Corn; Mrs. Geo. Degroff, Evening Star; Miss Mabel Peterson, Rainbow; Miss Florence Ming, Highland Lassie; Miss Dora Hulett, Sailor Girl. The judges were T. G. Davis, E. S. Lapum and Chief Adams. Prizes were awarded as follows; Best lady mask—1st Miss Gertrude Wagar; 2nd Mrs. Geo. Degroff; 3rd Miss Grace Harrison; special prize, Miss Mabel Peterson. Best Gentleman Mask—1st Percy Asselstine; 2nd Bruce Gordon; 3rd Frank Rikley; special prize, Willie Savage.

A Rare Delicacy.

Mr. Harry Hunter, the genial proprietor of the Royal, treated the boys to a rare delicacy on Friday evening last. It was no less than a mess of stewed English sparrows and they were pronounced A No. 1 by all who partook of them. "Harry" claims that he brought down 45 sparrows with one shot. The English sparrow may be a pest but it has its uses.

Deserving of Support.

The R. T. of T. will give a grand entertainment in the town hall, on Thursday evening, Feb. 17th. The best local talent has been secured for this occasion and an enjoyable time may be looked forward to. Admission only 10 cents. This society is doing a good work in a quiet way and our citizens should show their appreciation by turning out in large numbers to their entertainment. One good thing the R. T. of T's. have done, that may be mentioned in passing, is the furnishing of check books for the Sunday afternoon temperance meeting, whereby anyone desirous of taking the pledge can do so without becoming affiliated with any organization.

Telephone Trials.

A telephone was placed in the Bon Ton barber shop a few days ago and thereby hangs a tale. The boys were soon made acquainted of the new acquisition and then the fun began.

Ting-a-ling-a ling!
Hello!
Is that Phil's barber shop?
Yes.
Is that you Phil?
Yes
Well, kindly send an Egyptian Egg Shampoo to the Paisley House.
Br-r-r r-r-r-r.

In a few minutes the telephone rang again, and orders poured in from every quarter in town.

"Send down a pompadour hair cut to Boyle & Son," "A close cropped Vandyke to the Campbell House," "An after dinner shave to Smith's Grocery," "A curled hirsute to the Robinson Coy's," "A waxed Napoleon to Lahey & McKenty's," and "A warm water bath to the curling rink," were a few of the orders received. In the evening when a few of Phil's friends dropped in to sample his Pace's twist they found him meditating on the trials of a man with a telephone and saying uncomplimentary things of Bell's invention.

Police Notes.

Chief Adams has received notice from Port Hope to be on the lookout for a Frenchman or Swiss with a decidedly foreign accent answering to the name of Snider. He is wanted there for stealing a number of watches and a gold chain. Chief Adams informs us that the fellow was here about the middle of January and delivered a lecture in the West Ward Academy. He is headed the other way and will probably pull up at Toronto.

The Chief has received detailed description of a quantity of goods that were stolen from the G. T. R. station at Montreal recently. The authorities believe that the thief may endeavor to dispose of the goods in the guise of a pedlar.

The Chief is also on the lookout for Geo. Morris, alias Gibbons, who stole a horse, cutter, harness and a valuable robe from Morton, Leeds Co., on Jan 24th. Morris has two indictments registered against him at Brockville, although only 21 years of of age. The animal stolen is described as a very large bay mare, 14 years old, enlarged ankle on right hind leg, blind in one eye, coarse hair and rather poor condition. The cutter, however, was nearly new and the robe a valuable one.

ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN.

But This Time it was a God-Send to Mr. John Brown, a G.A.R. Veteran, of 2446 Marshall St., Philadelphia—Dodged Shot and Shell in the Interest of His Country, only to be Attacked by that Insidious Disease, Catarrh—But Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder Cured and Permanently, too—This is what He Says:—

"By a mere accident I came across Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder. I was a great sufferer from that dreaded malady—catarrh. To-day it gives me unbounded pleasure to state for suffering humanity's sake that this wonderful remedy effected a speedy and permanent cure in my case, and I have been so thankful for it ha I am willing to spend the remainder of my days in spreading the good news to my fellow sufferers."

The council met in regular session, Mayor Jamieson presiding. Present—F. Miller, Boyle, Vandusen, Ming, Madole, S. R Miller, Ruttan, Dey, Aylsworth, Alexander.

The minutes of last regular session were read and confirmed.

A communication from Wilson & Wilson was read stating that Mr. Robert Light had consulted them in reference to damage being done to his property by reason of excavation made on the highway at the foot of Donald street by Jno. R. Scott, who is removing the earth and has already taken away about 500 loads. Mr. Light says that unless the work ceases and the highway is placed in the same condition as it was he will take proceedings against the town. The matter was referred to the town solicitor for an opinion.

A communication from the town solicitor in reference to the fees charged by the Police Magistrate for the commitment of tramps to gaol and fees incurred in similar cases. The town solicitor said he failed to see that the fees charged by the magistrate would be affected by reason of his having the information laid under the Criminal Code instead of under the town by-laws. The fees in each case would be identical, $2 25, assuming that the magistrate is correct in charging anything for making up the record of convictions. In making up this record the magistrate was acting under instructions from the Attorney General's Department, and it is necessary in the interests of justice that all convictions should be published in the newspapers. Mr. Herrington failed to see any authority calling upon the town to pay the magistrate the fees asked for or any fees whatever. This is a matter to be arranged between the corporation and the Police Magistrate, for if he be not compensated for services performed by him in connection with convictions under the by laws of the town, the town would experience great difficulty in enforcing any of the by-laws of the town, and Mr. Herrington believes that it would be cheaper to pay the Police Magistrate the fees asked for than precipitate strained relations between the Magistrate and the council. The town solicitor appended some of the arrangements in other towns in regard to this matter. In Strathroy the magistrate is paid $50 per year in addition to the regular fees. In Cardinal, Lindsay, Picton, Prescott, Trenton, and Gananoque, receive a salary from the town. In Deseronto the magistrate is paid $2.45 for each case. It was referred to the Police Committee.

The auditor's report was presented.

The agreement between the town and J. R. Scott in reference to the Incandescent Electric Light scheme was read and a clause added that Mr. Scott be bound to furnish a system of voltage.

The Street Committee reported that the town was not in a position to consider the purchase of road making machinery at present.

The Fire, Water and Light Committee reported recommending the purchase of 500 feet of new hose. The chairman was instructed to make enquiries in reference to the hose and report at the next meeting of the council.

The Poor and Sanitary Committee reported an expenditure of $57.38 since last report.

It was moved by Couns. Ruttan and Miller that the Police Committee be authorized to confer with the Police Magistrate and learn from him what he is prepared to do the criminal business of the town for and report to the council.

His Worship, Mayor Jamieson, gave the following information in regard to the matter, which he had gone to the trouble of securing in order to aid the council in arriving at a conclusion: Mr. Daly paid into the town treasury in the years mentioned below the following amounts: 1895, $12, 1896, $10.50, 1897, $13, a total of $35.50. Mr. Daly drew the following amounts from the town: 1895, $21.50, 1896 $33.25, 1897, $15 75, a total of $85 50. Mr. Daly received $50 in excess of the money paid over by him to the town in the past three years.

On motion the fees of the Police Magistrate were ordered to be paid, and the Ruttan-Miller motion was allowed to go by the board, the old arrangement with the magistrate being allowed to stand.

A snow by law was given its first reading. Among other things it called upon the owner or occupant of any tract of land to remove the snow from the sidewalk in front of their buildings before ten o'clock each morning.

The old by-law governing furious driving was considered binding enough and was allowed to stand.

Appeals against dog tax from R. Babcock, D. S. Vanalstine and Alf. Wagar, On motion of Messrs. F. Miller and Leonard new deeds were ordered to be given to the parties in Clarkeville who were given wrong deeds when they purchased the lots from the town.

Coun. Vandusen brought up the assessment of the Bell Telephone Co. The company is in receipt of a revenue of over $3,000 and only paid $22 in taxes. Their assessment was altogether too low in comparison with other properties in town.

On motion $30 was order to be placed in the hands of the Poor and Sanitary Committee.

Moved by Coans. Ruttan and S. R. Miller that the Fire, Water and Light Committee be authorized to advertize for tenders for the lighting of the town by gas or electricity for an all night service.

On motion of Leonard and F. F. Miller the consideration of the motion was laid over till a more convenient season.

ACCOUNTS.

Thos. Meaghar, stone, $7.95; Napanee Gas Co., $8 10; Sam Kelley, burying a dog, 50c.; J. J. Woodcock, flushing sewer, $1.50; Bell Telephone Co., $10 00. The following accounts were referred to committees: A. W. Grange, $1.75; S. J. Howard, wood, $8.00.

The treasurer was granted a voucher for $1,020.

Council adjourned.

Going to Tamworth.

After a very successful pastorate of nearly seven years, the Rev. J. W. Jones is about to resign the mission of Westport, having accepted the parish of Tamworth, offered him by the Archbishop of Ontario. Rev. Mr. Jones is a cheery, hearty Englishman and will be missed by a great many people in the mission field of Westport and vicinity.—Brockville Recorder.

CAMPAIGN CLIPS

F. S. Wartman, the Liberal Candidate for Addington, is canvassing in the back country and is meeting with great success. His prospects are very encouraging.

Bowen E. Aylsworth's election in Lennox is assured. All that is required to make assurance doubly sure is vigilance and work on the part of his friends.

Dr. Smythe is the Conservative Candidate for Kingston. It will be just plain Smith after the elections.

CAPTURE OF A PIRATE.

Bartholemy Defeated One Spanish Vessel, but Had to Succumb to Three.

Frank R. Stockton, in his sketches of "The Buccaneers of Our Coast" in St. Nicholas, tells of the capture of a huge Spanish merchantman by Bartholemy Portuguez and his small crew. Mr. Stockton thus relates the misfortune that befell the victors:

They cast anchor at Cape St. Anthony, on the west end of Cuba. After a considerable delay at this place they started out again to resume their voyage. But it was not long before they perceived to their dismay three Spanish vessels coming toward them. It was impossible for a very large ship, manned by an extremely small crew, to sail away from these fully equipped vessels, and as to an attempt to defend themselves against the overwhelming power of the antagonists that was too absurd to be thought of even by such a reckless fellow as Bartholemy. So when the ship was hailed by the Spanish vessels he lay to and waited until a boat's crew boarded him.

With the eye of a nautical man the Spanish captain of one of the ships perceived that something was the matter with this vessel, for its rigging and sails were terribly cut up in the long fight through which it had passed, and, of course, he wanted to know what had happened. When he found that the great ship was in the possession of a very small body of pirates, Bartholemy and his men were immediately made prisoners, were taken on board the Spanish ship, were stripped of everything they possessed, even their clothes, and were shut up in the hold. A crew from the Spanish ships was sent to man the vessel which had been captured, and then the little fleet set sail for San Francisco in Campeachy.

An hour had worked a very great change in the fortunes of Bartholemy and his men. In the fine cabin of their grand prize they had feasted and sung and had gloried over their wonderful success, and now in the vessel of their captor they were shut up in the dark, to be enslaved or perhaps executed.

A Mr. Kingsley came along and picked up the lifeless body of Mr. Haight and took it to Dr. Karn's office and Mrs. Haight being severely injured was taken to the Royal Hotel. An inquest was held on Tuesday and it was found that the old man's neck was broken. A jury was called which met at 10 o'clock the same day but adjourned until the following Friday at 2 o'clock p.m. Several witnesses have been subpœned. The jury met again on Friday, but all the witnesses not being able to be present, they again adjourned for a week. To the Electors of Lennox

Having been chosen by the Liberal Party of Lennox as their candidate at the next election, I wish publicly to thank the party for the confidence reposed in me in tendering me the nomination. Since the meeting of the convention at which I was so chosen I have visited mamy parts of the riding and have met with most encouraging support, both from Liberals and old time Conservatives.

I have been asked to outline my policy, and in brief I may say that it shall ever be my policy to study the needs of the people of this Province in general and of this riding in particular, and to use my best endeavors to advance what I believe to be the best interests of my constituents. I unhesitatingly announce my faith in the general policy of Mr. Hardy and his colleagues, because I believe it has been, and is, their aim to conduct the affairs of the Province in an honest and business like manner. The very fact that the Opposition has failed to point out a single instance of corruption during a period of twenty-five years is conclusive evidence to my mind of the purity of the adminstration. While I am a believer in the ability, honesty and integrity of the present Government, I reserve to myself the right to criticize that Government in all matters when I feel it is to the public interest to do so. I most emphatically repudiate any intention upon my part to blindly follow any man or any set of men.

I have also been asked my views upon the question of granting bonuses to the manufacturers of iron. I am not in sympathy with this policy, because I do not believe it to be to the best interests of the majority of the people of this province, and if elected I will use my influence against the present bonus system.

Between now and the day of the election I hope to have an opportunity of discussing the public questions of the day with all of the electors of Lennox, and to carefully weigh any suggestions relating to the public good, as my sole aim, if elected, will be to honestly represent the people of Lennox in all matters coming before the House.

Thanking you for the generous support accorded me in the past, which I shall confidently rely upon in the future, I remain,

Your obedient servant

B. E. AYLSWORTH.

TAMWORTH.

The "At home" given by the "Tanyeca club" on Tuesday evening was one of the most enjoyable entertainments of the season. Notwithstanding the unfavorable state of the weather there was a large number present. The at home was held in Coxall's hall, which was tastefully decorated for the occasion. Dancing was kept up till about 3 a.m. when the company dispersed. All report having a most pleasant time. Mr. D. Henwood, of Napanee, presided at the piano. In spite of the storm quite a number attended from a distance. The boys are to be congratulated upon the success of their undertaking.

The annual missionary meeting of Christ church will be held on Tuesday evening, 22nd inst., at 7 p.m. The deputation will consist of Rev. R. S. Forneri, Rural Dean of Adolphustown, Rev. Chas. PICTON.

Wheels have been used in place of runners for the past week.

Several elderly as well as young men of the town are talking of soon starting for the Klondike.

One or two car loads of hogs are shipped from here every week.

The political pot will soon be boiling as well dried timber is thrown into the flames every day which keeps the fire blazing.

A new Methodist church is to be built where the old stone one that contains the town clock now stands. Tenders are out for contractors and the building will be pushed at once.

About two miles from Picton, near what is known as the Brisbin Hill, occurred one of the most deplorable accidents that could happen. On Monday, Feb 7th, at about five o'clock p.m. while on their way home Mr. Henry H. Haight division court clerk of Milford and his wife were overtaken by two teams running at a furious rate attached to lumber sleighs. The one driven by Mr. B. Harrison turned out to go by and the following team driven by Mr. P. Kellar dashed into the back of the cutter throwing out the occupants. Keller and Harrison programme was one of unusual merit, consisting of music, readings and recitations. The popular junior minister of the circuit gave an address on "true manhood," which was a model of brevity and good thought. Two well rendered solos by Mr. Bruton, of Napanee, delighted the audience. Mrs. Thompson, of Newburgh, and Mrs. (Dr.) Beeman gave two duetts which fully sustained their reputation as singers of superior merit. Miss Line, of Napanee, delighted the house with two solos which will assure her an invitation to come again. An excellent reading was given by Miss Wellbanks, of Newburgh. Rev Mr. Thompson, chairman of Newburgh circuit, interested the house for an hour, giving the rise progress and possibilities of the Dominion, and closed by promising a lecture on the "Klondike," in the near future. As the Rev. speaker warmed to his subject he seemed to forget the recent mercurial dip in the thermometer and grew eloquent as he described the vast extent of our great Dominion as reaching from the forty second degree of latitude to the north pole. While his audience were to a man, willing to accept his boundry on the north, there were those who expressed dissent in regard to his dividing line on the South. Due notice will be given of the next entertainment, which the committee are determined shall excell anything which has been in the past. All come, nuggets from the Klondike to be distributed.

The concert given under the auspices of the Royal Templars of Temperance in the town hall last evening was highly successful. The following assisted in the programme: Maud Robinson, W. Harris, W. Mowat, W. Bruton, Stella Wagar, Lileon Allen, Dot Smith, Viola Hemstreet, Chas. Stevens, jr., Alex. Karr, Fred Arnott, Miss Bruton, Miss McKim and others.

Charles Freeman had his leg badly sprained in a friendly scuffle on Saturday afternoon. We have been requested to contradict the statement in this week's twinkler that the accident occurred at the Royal Hotel. Paine's Celery Compound Gives Health and Good Looks to Sick Women of Every Age.

WELLS & RICHARDSON CO.,

DEAR SIRS:—It gives me great pleasure to testify to the fact that Paine's Celery Compound has caused a remarkable change in my condition. For ten years I have suffered from nervousness and neuralgia, and have used medicines of all kinds without finding relief.

Your Paine's Celery Compound was recommended to me, and after using seven bottles I find myself well and strong, and can rest and sleep with ease and comfort. I believe it to be the best medicine in the world, and I always recommend it with pleasure.

Yours truly,

MRS. A. ALLEN, Ramsay, Ont.

THE SLOAN MEDICINE CO.

Dear Sirs—For years I was troubled with periodical sick headaches, being affected usually every Sunday, and used all the remedies that were advertised as cures, and was treated by almost every doctor in Guelph but without any relief. One doctor told me it was caused by a weak stomach, another said it was hereditary and incurable. I was induced by a neighbor to try Sloan's Indian Tonic, and am happy to say I did so. A few doses gave immediate relief, and one bottle and a half made a complete cure.

This was three years ago and the headaches have never returned. I was also troubled with asthma and nothing helped me like your Sloan's Indian Tonic. I can heartily recommend it to all and will be glad to give any particulars to any one afflicted as I was.

were also referred to, as well as our fine educational system, which those eminent authorities declare, is unsurpassed by any in the world. Mr. Symington challenged the doctor to point out a better authority than the book he was quoting from, but on this subject Mr. Meacham was as dumb as the proverbial oyster. The Opposition do not want light, and cold facts are unpalatable to them. They deal in glittering generalities and gasconade and although for the past 20 years they have been preaching the doctrine of direct taxation it is as far in the distance as ever.

AT his meeting on Monday night Dr. Meacham endeavored to create a little sympathy for that much advertised politician, Mr. St. John. The doctor didn't attempt to justify the course pursued by his colleague but referred to the way he had been held up to ridicule by the Reform press. St. John richly deserves to be relegated to private life for the remainder of his days. Actuated by the hope of making a little party capital St. John has dealt a blow at the Canadian hog trade the effect of which will be felt for some time to come. The investigation into the piggery question showed that the government had taken all the necessary precautions to stamp out the cholera and that there was no cause for alarm. St. John with a reckless disregard of the consequences and a complete ignorement of the facts has succeeded in creating a prejudice against pork and a belief abroad that Canadian pigs are dangerous. In Ontario the name of St. John is to pork what that of Luetgert is to sausages in Chicago. Everyone knows how the ill-advised cry of the Ontario Opposition in the past in Allowing that with reasonable care no pupil need purchase more than one book in each subject, the cost per year to each pupil for text books would not exceed fifty cents. And yet Mr. Whitney and his colleagues grow eloquent in depicting the woes of the poor taxpayers who are ground down under "Ross' school book monopoly." Col. Mathieson comes forward with a number of Irish text books, and these, he says, are cheaper than the Ontario text books. The mere fact that they are unsuitable for use in our public schools makes no difference to this severe critic. There are discarded text books on the shelves of every bookseller which can be bought for a mere song. The old fashioned high bicycle is very cheap now, but no one brings that forward as a reason why the pneumatic safety should be reduced in price.

In regard to the number of text books it is only necessary to say that in 1875, under Dr. Ryerson, there were used in the public schools of Ontario 55 text books, and in 1883, the last year of Mr. Crook's administration, 53 text books. In 1898, under the efficient management of Hon. Geo. W. Ross, there are only 11 text books in use in the public schools. Ontario is enjoying a good system of education and the parrot cry, "it is time for a change," will not induce the intelligent electorate of this province to hand over their educational system to a set of men who would put back the hand on the dial for many years to come.

A GREAT BOOK.

Ogilvie's Klondyke book is the best selling one of the year ; but a book.—free for all who ask,— that excells it in real merit, becanse treating effectively of a subject of more lasting importance to the peopledof this province, is the annual report of the Ontario Agricultural College and Experimental Farm at Guelph. Where one man will wax rich in the now famous gold mines of the Yukon district of Canada, a hundred may acquire a competence if not a great deal more by sticking to the farm in Ontario. The wealth of matter in the Report is of incalculable value to the country.

Agriculture is our greatest industry and the information given thereabout by this publication of the Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto, is up-to-date and reliable. The report is, moreover, well-illustrated, and for a Government blue-book, written in a most interesting style. The Ontario Agricultural College is beginning to feel the full cumulative forces of nearly a quarter of a century's existence,—the past year having been the most successful in its twenty-four years' history. Proof of this is found in the fact that of the students now in attendance over ninety-five per cent came on the express recommendation of ex-students. President Mills in accounting for this pleasing feature of the college's prosperity says :

"The great majority of those who have been with us long enough to get a fairly thorough knowledge of our course of study and apprenticeship, are giving a good account of themselves at home and abroad. They have gone back to work with an increased liking for farm life ; they are pushing to the front as practical, progressive men ; and, wherever you find them, they are warm friends of the college at Guelph.

STELLARTON, N.S.—James R. Murray, a well known violinist, of this place, who has traveled extensively throughout the Provinces, makes this statement:

"I was running down in health and my weight fell off from 175 to 150 pounds. Prescriptions did me but little good. My trouble was called nervous dyspepsia. I resorted to Hood's Sarsaparilla and after taking five bottles I was greatly benefited. I feel as well now as ever in my life, and have increased in flesh so that I now weigh 177 pounds. I am well known in this part of the country, having followed my profession, that of a violin musician for the last 26 years. I gladly tell my friends what Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for me. Before I began taking the medicine I did not have any ambition, but now all is changed and my dyspeptic trouble perfectly cured." JAMES R. MURRAY.

In New York State a man assessed for $3,000 pays about $3 a year to support asylums. In Ontario the Liberal Government pays that and Whitney and his organs call it 'squandering the country's resources.'

PORT HOPE GUIDE.

In the year of the Sandfield Macdonald Administration he granted for education $351,000 ; in 1896 the Liberal Government granted $702,000. By leaving the people to raise the balance in taxes the Government might have added $351,000 to the surplus.

Mr. Whitney, who, it is said, aspires to the Premiership of this Province, is reported as having made this statement in regard to Patrons, comprising a great part of the farming community ;—"Who are these farmers, that they should dare to claim for themselves an interest in politics and a voice in the administration of the State?" Probably Mr. Whitney will wish those words unsaid on March 1st.

The Sandfield Macdonald Government sold timber at an average of $260.41 a mile ; the Liberal Government realized $1,221.67 a mile, besides a greatly increased rental and per M rate. The money thus obtained saves the people from higher municipal taxation.--Ex.

NAPANEE, FRIDAY, FEB 18th 189 8.

Financial record of the Ontario Government for 1897:—

Receipts	$4,139,847.68
Expenditure	3,767,675.70
Surplus for 1897	$372,171.98
Assets	$5,158,308.14
Liabilities at present payable	36,962.90
Surplus	$5,121,345.24

The Mail and Empire points out that when Mr. John Sandfield Macdonald went out of office there was a surplus of $3,811,863. What the organ omits to mention is that every dollar of Sandfield's so called surplus was offset by a liability. Before going out of power he voted $1,500,000 for railways. He left a debt to the Dominion Government amounting to $601,000, which had to be paid by his successors; he owed $197,000, collections on Crown Lands, that had to be paid; he owed $96,500 on Rockwood Asylum account; he passed a teachers' superannuation act, which cost $1,307,000, besides leaving other smaller debts to be paid. Take these items from his "surplus" and what remains?—Ex.

At Mr. Meacham's meeting here on Monday evening Mr. Symington took the wind out of the doctor's sails by the authorities he quoted from. The doctor ran the gamut of the Opposition charges, and declared that practically our last timber limit had been sold, Ontario was in debt and we were on the verge of direct taxation. Mr. Symington did not go to any partizan source to refute the extravagant and pessmistic utterances of Dr. Meacham. He quoted from the published report of the last meeting of the British Association of Scientists, whose recent convention at Toronto commanded the attention of the civilized world. Such men as Sir William Dawson, Prof. Macoun and many others whose reports are accepted by the British Government as authentic were brought forward to show that the timber resources of Ontario, if husbanded in the future as carefully as in the past will last for many generations. The vast mineral resources of the province reference to the "calf with a cough" militated against the export trade of our cattle. The Toronto Star, an independent paper says: "Year ago the trichinosis scare paralyzed the pork business. * * A story that a bug had been discovered in a barrel of apples barred United States fruit out of Germany. An embargo is about to be put on United States horses entering Germany, owing to reports of diseases in the animals. All this proves not only the necessity of preventing disease in animals, fruits and orchards, but illustrates also the inadvisability of raising scares and using them for political purposes. While Mr. St. John was using his piggery scare to make votes, he was striking a blow at every barn-yard in Canada."

MR. WHITNEY AND THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Mr. Whitney has given us his educational policy in embryo, but it is so vague that it is difficult to understand what the Opposition leader is driving at. When Mr. Whitney leaves the beaten track of denunciation to outline his policy he goes around in a circle, like a man lost in the woods, and at the conclusion finds himself back at the starting point. So long as Mr. Whitney keeps on the beaten track and contents himself with referring to our public schools as a huge mould from which candidates for the high school are pressed, he is safe. It is no tax on the ingenuity to refer to the Minister of Education as an autocrat, or to denounce the public school system in detail, but when Mr. Whitney enters the forest of facts and attempts to explain how he would essay to better our school system he loses himself as hopelessly as the late Dan McGinty, when he took his memorable plunge into the sea.

It is an easy matter to find fault. There is no system, however perfect, but some carping critic can pick flaws in it. The school system of Ontario was not brought to its present high standard of excellence without some mistakes being made, nor is it claimed for it that it is without defects. It will, however, bear favorable comparison with any school system in the world, and in attaining to this high plane it is well to remember that it did so despite the obstacles placed in its way by reactionary spirits like Mr. Whitney and a few of his colleagues.

At present our school system is presided over by a Minister of Education, who is responsible to the Legislature. Mr. Whitney proposes the appointment of a huge advisory board, to whom the minister will be responsible. While Mr. Whitney has no fault to find with the high schools and collegiate institutes he purposes to reduce their usefulness by enlarging the curriculum of the public schools and making them more complete in themselves. It is generally conceded that the curriculum of the public schools is complete enough as it is. Everyone will recall the agitation that was caused a few years ago over high school work being taught in a number of the public schools. It was found that the time of the teachers was so taken up with this work that the other branches suffered in consequence. The practice was discontinued.

Mr. Whitney, Dr. Meacham and others cavil at the number and cost of the text books, used in the public schools. Here is a full list of the text books authorized by the Minister of Education, together with the retail price of each:

First reader, part I	$0 10

residence is occupied and twenty-seven students are lodging outside, most of them in the immediate neighborhood of the college. The total number on the roll in 1897 was 275—212 in the regular course, and sixty-three in the special dairy course, the great majority being Ontario farmers' sons of the very best class."

As an outcome of the tuberculosis agitation, the Hon. John Dryden, Minister of Agriculture, decided about a year ago to provide for the manufacture of tuberculin in the college. The necessary apparatus was ordered at once, and the bacteriologist, Mr. F. C. Harrison, soon got things in shape to commence work. The first fourteen doses were sent out about the end of last May; and since that time the demand has increased so rapidly that it was found necessary to order an additional incubator and add a room to the laboratory. With these additions, it is hoped to be able to supply what is required in the Province.

The work in the department of field experiments is growing in importance from year to year. The experiments with varieties of wheat, oats, barley, peas, corn turnips, mangles, potatoes, carrots, green fodders, grasses, clovers, mixtures of grain, etc. have been carried on systematically and persistently on well defined lines for seven or eight years, on plots in different parts of a fifty-acre field, and under climatic conditions which have varied with the years. Hence the results now begin to indicate very clearly which varieties are best adapted to the soil and climate of the College Farm; and the co-operative experiments throughout the Province, carried on simultaneously by the College Experimental Union (largely under the direction of the experimentalist, Mr. C. A. Zavitz,) go to show that the varieties which have done best at the college, give the best results all over the Province.

In this way some excellent foreign varieties have been introduced, tested, and distributed throughout the Province—varieties which yield from six to eight bushels per acre more than any varieties previously grown. In oats and barley alone, the varieties introduced and distributed by the experiment station have, within the past four or five years, paid to the Province a good deal more than the entire cost of the college for the last ten years.

BEAUTY AND HEALTH TO FAIR WOMEN.

Miss Annie Patterson, of Sackville, N.B., Once the Victim of Nervousness and General Debility, Takes on the Health of Early Years.

Some remedies are nothing more than a temporary stimulant, and the reaction aggravates the disease. Where the system has become run down, and nervous debility in its worst forms have shown themselves, South American Nervine will cure. It strikes at the nerve centres and builds up the system by removing the real cause of trouble. Miss Annie Patterson, of Sackville, N. B., a lady well known in the Maritime Provinces, suffered terribly from indigestion and nervousness, and her case seemed incurable. She accepted South American Nervine without hope that it was any different to other remedies, but her words are, "I had taken only one bottle when my system began to take on the health of earlier years, and after taking three bottles I was completely cured."

Hearing of such a case a reporter called on Mr. J. J. Smith, living near Fredericksburgh Station, in Lennox Co., and interviewed him regarding the cure of his son who was in bad health and regained it by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Mr. Smith is one of the oldest residents in the locality, of direct U.E. Loyalist descent, and has resided all his life on the farm on which he lives. He is consequently well known throughout the district. In reply to the scribe's query he gave the details of the case. "My son, Stanley, was taken sick about the first of February, 1895. He became very deaf and had a dull constant pain in his head. He grew very weak, such a condition being more probably described by the term "general muscular weakness." He was troubled with severe pain in the back and had no appetite, continuing to steadily grow weaker and finally lost all ambition. He had little more color in him than a bit of white paper. A physician was consulted on the first appearance of the trouble. He carefully examined the case stating that the hearing was affected by catarrhal deafness, the pains in the back originating from muscular rheumatism and the constant tired feeling and general weakness was caused by over growth. These difficulties together with the after effects of la grippe left him a physical wreck. He had the benefit of careful medical attention for four months. The doctor had carefully treated him for the deafness and succeeded in restoring his hearing, but in other respects was no better. He ordered that he should be carefully nursed which was about all that could be done. To make things more clearly understood I might say he was at this time past twelve years of age, having grown very fast, was large enough for one six years his senior. The doctor said medicine could not benefit him and all that could be done must come by nursing. We naturally felt greatly discouraged at the prospect, not knowing what course to pursue in the future. At this juncture one of the druggists of Napanee who had previously compounded many prescriptions, recommended a trial of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. It was then the first of June when he purchased three boxes and commenced the treatment. When he had finished the second box his appetite, previously fickle and unsteady, had wonderfully improved. He continued taking the pills until seven boxes had been used. His strength returned with renewed vigor, and all signs of muscular rheumatism had vanished and he steadily regained a strong healthy color, and was able to do considerable light work in the harvest field such as riding the mower, reaper or horse-rake. He has since attended school regularly and though a year has elapsed, he has had no symptoms." Mrs. Smith spoken to about the matter readily concurred in all that had been said relative to her son's case, and was very decided in her views regarding the health giving properties contained in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a blood builder and nerve restorer. They supply the blood with its life and health-giving proprieties, thus driving disease from the system. There are numerous pink colored imitations, against which the public is warned. The genuine Pink Pills can be had only in boxes the wrapper around which bears the full trade mark, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People." Refuse all others.

HAND PAINTED GLASSES.

Fragile Ware Decorated With Dainty Scenes In Delicate Tints.

Wineglasses of fine make now have little fairylike hand painted scenes on one side. These are intended for champagne and like exhilarating beverages and are correspondingly gay, though not gaudy in tone. Whether full or empty the coloring on the glass shows to advantage, and the little oval picture is framed about with a delicate scrollwork of gilt. Thirty-six dollars will procure a dozen of these dainty drinking cups that seem almost too fragile and exquisite to be trusted to ordinary handling.

It is the Bohemian glass chiefly that is enriched with this handiwork. The miniature scenes depict goddesses, nymphs and cupids in various attitudes out of doors, and with only sketchy scarfs, grape clusters and garlands to enhance their charms. A Venus with long blond tresses sits in careless indolence on a river bank and toys with a white winged dove perched on her extended hand. Another glass of this set has a little scene of a Greek mother fondling her infant, the baby hands touching her cheek caressingly, and a flutter of rainbow hued scarfs being the only drapery. A busy little Cupid, aiming an arrow at a maid who accepts the situation in smiling mood, is another scene. This maiden is of modern days. Diana at her bath in the forest, white limbed and beauti-

Gentlemen, Fire First.

The opposing forces were within 50 feet of each other, and Lord Charles Hay, advancing in front of his regiment (the English guards), pulled off his hat to the French officers, who politely returned the salute. "Tell your men to fire!" cried Hay. "No," replied the Count of Autoroche, "we never fire first." This famous incident is so well established by the testimony of those who were present that it cannot be questioned, but it has been much misconstrued. It was not a display of excessive courtesy, most unseemly when the fate of a battle and the lives of soldiers were at stake. It was a rule of tactics, not a bit of rhodomontade, to which Autoroche gave utterance.

In a book called "Mes Reveries," written by Maurice de Saxe, and in which he stated the principles of military tactics, we find this rule laid down with emphasis. When two battalions approach, the one that fires first is beaten. "You are beaten," he says, "if you fire against an enemy approaching with rapidity. Your troop flatters itself that its fire will annihilate the enemy, and when it sees how little effect it has produced it will surely run; the company which has fired is out of countenance when it sees approaching through the smoke those who reserved their fire." In those days of poor guns the number who fell at a discharge was often very small. "I have seen whole discharges which did not kill four men," he says, "and I have never seen enough harm done to arrest an advance." Firing made more noise than it did harm, he continues. It was at the bayonet charge that men were killed, and he who did the killing won the battle.—"France Under Louis XV," by James Breck Perkins.

Please, Some Sugar on It.

An Italian woman knocked on the door of a fashionable flat on Lexington avenue at about dusk, says the New York Commercial. She was accompanied by a curly headed lad of 5 years, with large round eyes and the face of a cherub. The cherub's face was somewhat dirty, however, and his clothes were conspicuous from their many hued patchings. When the door was opened, the pair began a voluble appeal in the language of their native land. The impression conveyed was that they were strangers in New York, having arrived recently on a vessel from Genoa. Money was at once forthcoming for the woman, and the kind hearted tenant of the flat brought out a slice of bread and butter for the boy. Up to this point the conversation had been carried on in Italian only, but the lad looked up suddenly and with an unmistakable Bowery accent said, "Say, miss, won't yer put some sugar on it?"

both in the forest, white limbed and beautiful, locks from another glass. Two mermaids, with flowing locks and gleaming arms, breasting the waves of a blue, blue sea, is one subject, and a family group, somewhat patriarchal in regard to clothing and surroundings, another. In each and all the design is carried out with careful regard to detail, and the coloring, both the flesh tints and the bloom of the flowers, as well as the soft tones of the background, is appropriate. Although there are pinks and blues and rainbow tints in the pictures, the effect is light and delicate, as though the sun was shining through a bubble, this Bohemian glass is so thin, fine and luminous.

As a set off to the exquisite fineness of these glasses are drinking mugs and vases of coarser, heavier make, with peasant scenes enameled on them. There is nothing elusive and sunshiny about these. They look as though almost any servant might handle them with little risk, and the enamel work is raised, as though stamped on the outside and not all in one with the glass, as the hand painting appears. Rollicking, heavy footed peasants are these, depicted in blue and green kirties, long frocked coats and cocked hats, on the fluted sides of the drinking mugs. A good story is being told in one scene, and is being listened to with breathless interest. The participants are full of laughter. Some household emergency is portrayed in another and others show the homely folks in the various provinces engaged about their everyday tasks. Some of the lilylike vases and slender stemmed wineglasses have only gold filigree work about the edge or a shield and crest to distinguish them. Others have the most delicate tracery of green encircling their borders or wound about the stem.—New York Sun.

Rest For Tired Brains.

There is no organ in the human body which stands in greater need of rest than the brain, and this rest, the most efficacious of all, is afforded by sleep. Another kind of rest is a variation of work or a change of subject, the best rest most frequently for the higher or intellectual centers. An enormous amount of mental work can be undertaken if only sufficient variety is secured. In the end, however, the brain demands sleep, and this is more particularly the case with children, and especially when they have been much engaged in play. In the case of adults hard mental work up to the hour of going to bed may cause the loss of a night's rest, and it is an excellent plan to indulge in some kind of relaxation before retiring to rest, such as the perusal of light and amusing literature, some game or some music.

Children undoubtedly require more sleep than grown up people. Even to the age of 4 or 5 years a child should have one hour of sleep or at least rest in bed before its dinner, and it should be put to bed at 6 or 7 o'clock in the evening up to the fifteenth year. Most young people require ten hours of sleep and to the twentieth year nine hours. After that age every one must find out how much sleep he or she requires, though, as a general rule, at least six to eight hours are necessary. During growth there must be ample sleep if the brain is to develop to its full extent, and the more nervous, excitable or precocious a child is the longer sleep should it get if its intellectual progress is not to come to a premature standstill or life be cut short at an early age. The period of full maturity, with its maximum of mental activity, is the period of minimum demand for sleep.—New York Ledger.

Clean Mistaken.

"This watch"— began the man.

"Yes," interrupted the watchmaker, seizing it and rapidly opening it. "I see. It wants thorough cleaning, and"—

"Why," roared the man, "that's the new watch my wife bought here yesterday, and I want to exchange it for a larger size!"

"Oh—ah—um—yes. Certainly, sir," mumbled the watchmaker.—London Fun.

ALMOST UNBEARABLE.

"I suffered from kidney trouble so much that the pain in my back was almost unbearable and I felt tired and worn out all the time, my tongue was coated and until I took Doan's Kidney Pills I had been unable to do my housework for over a month. These pills have made a complete cure, all my kidney and bladder troubles have disappeared and I feel like a new very careful to keep track of what he says. An amusing instance of the results of not doing so was shown in the case of the manager of a music hall in the north of England who, although a most illiterate man, prided himself not a little on his brilliant oratorical powers and made it a practice in the course of the programme every Saturday night to announce the leading items of the forthcoming week's entertainment. One evening he finished his weekly speech in the following remarkable terms:

"Last, but not least, ladies and gentlemen, allow me to inform you that at an enormous expense I have exclusively engaged the marvelous Bormdec brothers, the world famed acrobats, to appear here in their celebrated entertainment for six nights, commencing Monday next—understand, ladies and gentlemen, the Bormdec brothers, the champion acrobats of the world."

Here he paused for a moment to regain his breath and then proudly continued:

"Yes, and, what's more, on Monday week we've got a troop coming what can knock 'em into a cocked hat."—Harper's Round Table.

The Origin of the Word Filibuster.

The name "buccaneer" was chiefly affected by the English adventurers on our coast, while the French members of the profession often preferred the name of "flibustier." This word, which has since been corrupted into our familiar "filibuster," is said to have been originally a corruption, being nothing more than the French method of pronouncing the word "freebooters," which title had long been used for independent robbers.—Frank R. Stockton in St. Nicholas.

AN AURORA LETTER

A Corresdondent Approves Rev. F. Elliott, of Richmond Hill.

Dodd's Kidney Pills a Heaven sent Medicine—Their Work in Aurora—Cure Every Case of Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Heart Disease, Lumbago, Lame Back and All Other Kidney Diseases.

AURORA, Feb. 14:—Dear Sir—The article published a few days ago, relating to the recovery of Rev. F. Elliott, of Richmond Hill, has been discussed at length in this town. It states facts similar to those of many cases here, all of which are well known to our citizens.

It is refreshing to find such a prominent and respected clergyman as Rev. Mr. Elliott taking so pronounced a step as he has done, in publicly recommending Dodd's Kidney Pills. His experience with this wonderful medicine is exactly similar to that of Aurora people. There is no medicine to be procured that can approach Dodd's Kidney Pills, which never fail to cure.

Bright's Disease and Diabetes, so long said to be incurable, are cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills as easily as a puff of wind blows out a candle flame. They have been used in this town by scores of people who were given up to die by their doctors, and who surprised and delighted their friends by their rapid and thorough recovery, after having used these Heaven-sent pills.

There is no medicine on earth that can compare with Dodd's Kidney Pills for Rheumatism, Lumbago, Lame Back, Heart Disease, Paralysis, Gout, Gravel, Stone in Bladder, Urinary Trouble, Blood Impurities, Female Weakness and all other Kidney Diseases. The Pills are simply infallible in these ailments.

It is the duty of every man to lighten the sufferings of his fellows as much as possible, and for that reason, I write this to proclaim to all victims of Bright's Disease, Diabetes, and any of the other Kidney Diseases I have named, that Dodd's Kidney Pills will cure them as certainly as night follows day, if they are given a chance.

All sufferers can get Dodd's Kidney Pills at any drug store. They cost only fifty cents a box, six boxes $2.50, on receipt of which price they will be sent by the Dodds Medicine Co., Limited, Toronto,

Yours, etc.,

KING KEEPING A LIVERY.

He Is Ivar Tofte, and He Claims a Right to the Throne of Norway.

Anent the king of Norway's recent celebration of his jubilee a correspondent writes:

Few people are aware, save those who know Norway well, that there is another king besides Oscar. His name is Ivar Tofte, and he keeps what is called a "station" in the Gudbransdal, a valley beyond the Romsdal, on the way to Christiania, where many very old Norwegian families live. A "station," I should explain, is a house where horses and carriages can be hired. Where there are no railway routes in Norway there are these "land skyds," some fast and some slow. Here a certain number of horses and carioles, stolkjoerres, or trilles, must be kept for the use of travelers.

Old Ivar Tofte traces his descent straight down from Harold Haarfager—Harold the Fair Haired—and says he is really king of Norway. This Harold's date is so remote that it is "wrapt in mystery," but the chronologers give it as from 860 (?) to 933. In his own district Ivar Tofte is considered king, and disputes have been brought to him to settle just as if he were king, disputes which would not be taken to the real sovereign. It is asserted that on one occasion King Oscar and Ivar Tofte met, and Tofte, patting Oscar on the back, exclaimed, "Ah, old fellow, if every one had his rights I should be where you are and you would be somewhere else."

Tofte is not without evidences of his royal lineage. He possesses a glorious service of gold plate, besides other relics of bygone splendor, and rumor has it keeps the best store of aqua vitæ in all Norway. Aqua vitæ is the national spirit, and it is only here and there in recognized shops that it is for sale. You cannot buy either it or whisky at most of the hotels, for the sale of spirits is very rigorously legislated for in the two kingdoms. And as for public houses, so called, there is none.

Ivar Tofte is a very good natured old man, and by no means averse to discussing his royal lineage with chance customers, nor does he by any means conceal the fact of his being the rightful king of Norway. He has been in the minds of the people a great deal during the recent jubilee celebrations.—London Modern Society.

The Cook Was Innocent.

The polite agent for the new parlor phonograph who knocked at the door insisted that the old lady who opened it place the tubes in her ears, and listen to one song. She need not buy—a pleasure to exhibit it—"just try it once, madam," etc.

"This song you will hear, madam," he said as she held the tubes doubtfully to her ears, "is 'My Darling, Pluck a Daisy From My Grave,' as sung by Leopoldo Moriarity, the famous New York tenor."

The agent started the machine up, but the old lady dropped the tubes and said:

"Jest hold on a minute till I come back. That dratted cook's opening another can of tomatoes in the kitchen with a table knife."—Detroit Free Press.

Penalties of Being a Bachelor.

The ancient Romans were severe with their bachelors, who, were made to pay heavy fines, and, worse than that, Camillus, after the siege of Veii, is recorded to have compelled them to marry the widows of the soldiers who had fallen in war. In the time of Augustus married men were preferred for public office. The Romans who had three children were exempted from personal taxes, and the bachelors had to pay them. Plato condemned single men to a fine, and at Sparta they were driven at certain times to the Temple of Hercules by the women, who castigated them in true military style. In the French settlements of Canada women were sent over after the men, and the single men, that they might be forced to marry, were subjected to a heavy tax and to restrictions on their business and their movements generally.—Exchange.

A Very Good Reason.

"Why did the boy stand on the burning deck?" asked an Alleghany girl.

"If that's a conundrum," replied her friend, "I'll give it up, for I never guess conundrums. Why did the boy stand on the burning deck?"

"Because it was too hot for him to sit down."—Pittsburg Chronicle.

The Baconian Cipher.

"William," said Bacon one day, "I am short. Lend me an X."

"Oh, wisest, etc., of mankind," replied Shakespeare, "I will lend thee just 1. Thou canst add a cipher and make a 10 out of it."

"I will!" muttered the other, vengefully, as he turned away, "and I will afterward put that cipher in your works, old man!"—Chicago Tribune.

RUNNING SORES.

Mr. Stephen Wescott, Freeport, N.S., found (Burdock Blood Bitters) a wonderful blood purifier and gives his experience as follows: "I was very much run down in health and employed our local physician who attended me three months, finally my leg broke out in running sores with fearful burning. I had thirteen running sores at one time, from my knee to the top of my foot. All the medicine I took did me no good, so I threw it aside and tried B.B.B.; when one-half the bottle was gone, I noticed a change for the better, and by the time I had finished two bottles my leg was perfectly healed and my health greatly improved."

CHAPTER I.

The sun had not yet set, but already it was dusk in the narrow, deep-banked bayou. A storm was gathering. Vane let his oars rest on the sides of the little skiff he was guiding down stream, and looked apprehensively through the trees at the lurid-red sunset, which a lid of livid cloud was about to shut down upon. A flash of lightning wrote its zigzag threat across the cloud, and a low thunder growl came after.

"And I have not even a water-proof cloak," Vane muttered.

He had never thought of bad weather when he left the camp of the railroad surveyors, forty miles back. He had provided himself against mosquitoes and panther cats, but not against storms. Now, he half regretted his project (undertaken in a spirit of adventure) to reach the river and its steam-boats by following the course of Black Bayou, a stream navigable to small "stern-wheelers" in high water, but now shrunken within its deep, narrow bed. It wound through a "dark corner" that Vane wanted to explore for the materials it might possibly afford for magazine sketches—a rich alluvial region—a paradise of cotton and riotous vegetation, inhabited by planters and their families. These people kept up their primitive customs, and lived the most isolated lives imaginable, going nowhere, knowing nothing of, and caring nothing for, the world outside their cattle, pastures and cotton-fields and their dilapidated houses, built high from the ground, with an eye to overflows.

Glad enough would Vane have been to see one of these black cheerless-looking abodes at this moment; but there was no token that he was near a habitation. Woods stretched away on either side of the bayou—cottonwood, hackberry, ash, and sycamore-trees, knotted with festoons of wild vines.

He grasped his oars and plied them with energy. Pretty soon a clearing appeared ahead, and then a welcome sound struck on his ear—the shrill, wild cry of a peacock. The swamp disappeared upon one side, a level expanse of snowy cotton-field stretched as far as the eye could reach, and in the midst of this white sea there was an island of tall weeds where, like the black hulk of a stranded ship, stood a tall, weather-beaten old house. A big pecan-tree stretched its wide arms on one side, and a single cape-myrtle-tree tossed up a spray of pink blossoms above the grey moss that half enveloped it. Further back was seen a tall, rickety-looking gin-house and a few negro cabins.

Vane had climbed the steep bank to make these discoveries; while he stood there he heard a strange sound—a low sobbing. He listened, without moving.

"If I had my way I'd bite his old red nose off—the ugly monster. To think of his marrying her!"

It was a child's voice, and its accents were those of passionate indignation. Vane, following the direction of the sound with his eye, saw a little figure in a dark-blue frock crouched under a cottonwood-tree. He went up to her, and stooped over her as she lay, face down, among the yellow-flowered camomile weeds.

"What's the matter, little one?"

She started up, dashed the hair out of her black eyes, and stared at him. She was a dark, elfish-looking creature, but there was no hint of African blood in her small delicate features and straight hair.

"Who are you, and what do you want?" she asked, at last.

"I am a good fairy, sent to help you in your troubles—dropped out of that black cloud yonder."

"What's my troubles?"

"A horrid wretch with a big red nose is about to marry your—sister" (at a venture), "and you don't like it."

"She ain't my sister. She is too good to be my sister, though she's old Parke Weir's daughter. I s'pose she is, but she's too good to be his daughter either. He ain't much better'n a nigger—I ain't no nigger myself, though you see me dark so—but his wife, she was the sweetest, prettiest woman that ever lived—and she was that smart! and all that. And he'd lift the muggage offen Black Bayou place and keep him from bein' a tramp in his old age. Then Irma cried, and old Van begged and promised, and—"

"She consented—woman-like."

"What else could she do? 'Twas to save her father. And then, as I told you, she ain't never seen a decent man in her life. I've lived in Campti, on the river, some—and seen more'n she has. She ain't never been five miles from this lonesome old hole, and she's never seen menkind but yallo' red-necked, bacca-spittin' codgers, straddle of little goats of mustangs, a-huntin' cattle. She's half crazy to git away from here since her mother died—but she didn't know how to. For all that, she wouldn't ever 'gree to marry old Van till he come las' night with that news about her pa. He brought a lot of weddin' finery, too; but she wouldn't look at it. She was a-dressin' in that same little black silk her mother made—dressin' and lookin' pale as death, and so strange out of her eyes, it jes' upset me, and I run down here."

"And she is married now?"

"God knows. The old priest was goin' to put on his robe when I come away.

"Let's slip up to the house and find out what is going on."

He jumped up in his impulsive way, and pulled her after him. Holding her hand, he walked with her rapidly to the house through the thickening twilight. The clouds had spread all over the sky, and the lightning flashed at intervals, but no rain fell as yet.

Vane opened the gate, entered the weedy yard, and ascended the steep rickety steps that led up into the gallery—as all verandas are called in this region. The windows opening upon it were closed, but one of them had a broken blind. Vane softly stepped up to this window and looked in.

The room was lighted by candles. The priest stood there in his robes, and before him stood the incongruous pair he had just pronounced man and wife—a superbly shaped girl, with a pale, strange, high-bred face—and a pursy, red-nosed, thick-necked man of more than middle age.

"It's old Solon Vanhorn—the rich cotton-dealer on Levee street," muttered Vane. "What business on earth has he got with a girl like that? How he gloats on her with his pig eyes—the old lecher!"

There were only two other people present—a common-looking man, and a woman, who shook her bony finger at Dusky when she spied her at the window.

"They are married," Dusky whispered faintly. "Oh, Lord! he's goin' to kiss her. There! Thank the saints!"

The latter ejaculation had been elicited by the action of the bride. As the coarse mouth of the groom approached her own, and his arms touched her, she pushed him off with all her strength. Pale, with anger-lighted eyes, she stood looking at him with the imperiousness of an outraged queen.

His face flushed dark red with anger.

"I'll call your father, and see if his authority can't make you have sense enough to treat your husband with a show of kindness. See here, Weir, this girl keeps on her high horse."

"She does, does she? Well, she must git down now. She'll have to. She's bound to you, nard and fast, now."

The girl started and stared in amazement, as a tall, hard-featured man came out of an inner-room, and planted himself before her.

"Father—I—thought—"

"You thought I was jugged, did you, honey? Well, that was a little trick Van and me fixed up to bring you to terms. I come home with him last night, but I've kept hid till now—the knot's tied. You are all right now. It's for the best. Mr. Vanhorn's a fine man. He'll take you to the city to his big house, and show you the sights. You'll see the world, my girl, and have fine clothes in plenty, and books, that's what you love. You'll thank me for helping you make this good match. He'll make you a kind husband, too; so begin and show him a wife's kindness. Give him his kiss. Come, now," he went on,

STRENGTH CAME BACK.

The Anvil once more rings with the strokes of his hammer.

Mr. Thos. Porteous, the well known blacksmith of Goderich, Ont, tells how sickness and weakness gave way to health and strength. "For the past four years my nerves have been very weak, my sleep fitful and disturbed by dreams, consequently I arose in the morning unrested. I was frequently very dizzy and was much troubled with a mist that came before my eyes, my memory was often defective and I had fluttering of the heart, together with a sharp pain through it at times. In this condition I was easily worried and felt enervated and exhausted. Two months ago I began taking Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, since that time I have been gaining in health and strength daily. They have restored my nerves to a healthy condition, removed all dizziness and heart trouble, and now I sleep well and derive comfort and rest from it. That Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are a good remedy for Nervousness, Weakness, Heart Trouble and similar complaints goes without saying." Price 50 cts. a box at all druggists or T. he her father? She had been taught to call him so by himself, not by her mother. She had never heard her mother speak one word of fondness to him. They had lived together as man and wife. He had been fond of her in a selfish, narrow way. He kept her to himself. She saw no one, went nowhere, had no object in her dreary, monotonous life except to educate her child. For Irma, the man had never fellow's provisions as well as his boat," Irma said smiling. "I wonder what he thought of me? I was wild with the whirling in my head. How handsome he looked in that lightning flash! He looked like the picture of Byron with his curls and his bright, daring eyes. I wonder if many men look so out in the world. I asked my mother once, and she would not tell me. 'You will never see the world,' she said. And now, I am about to see it. Oh, under what circumstances! what will I do? What will become of me? If that young stranger told them, they will pursue me. If Vanhorn is dead, they will imprison me and hang me. If he is alive, they will compel me to live with him. I am his wife. He will no doubt shut me up in that gloomy bayou place as a punishment."

Then hope would spring up in her young, imaginative breast—and a feeling akin to joy in being away and free, with the world before her. She felt a wild, half-sweet, half-defiant energy born within her—a heart to do and dare.

The bayou had widened and the current grown stronger.

"The river must be nigh," thought Irma. "Then I shall meet steamboats. I will take passage on one of these. How will I pay my passage? Oh! with my little watch—my mother's watch. I hate to part with it, but it can not be helped. May be I can stop somewhere and sell the skiff."

In the afternoon of that day she came to the river. She drew her breath with a shivering sensation—half-desolateness, half joy—as the little skiff glided out into the broad, muddy current. She had never before seen the river—it seemed the entrance to the untried world. The bayou she had known all her life—it was like an old friend; and she had left it behind her. She felt utterly alone.

"If only I had Dusky with me—dear little Dusky," she sighed, as the face of the elf rose before her—the sole creature she regretted at Black Bayou Place—Dusky, the waif, whom a poor white tenant of Weir's had brought on the plantation a few years before.

"'Taint none of my young one," the man's wife explained. "None of my folks have sich a skin and sickly outlandish eyes. But she's smart, that young one is. Leastways she's sharp. She hates work like pizen—only when it's to her notion; and then, gentlemen, nobody can't be spryer than Dusky."

The swifter current bore Irma's boat more rapidly on. She passed stretches of lonely woods and broad acres of cotton and russet corn, and farm-houses and their outbuildings. People on the bank looked curiously at the little craft with its female occupant, but nobody the sweetest, prettiest woman that lived—and she was that smart! You ought to hear her play. She teached Irma, and Irma was a-teachin' me—and now that old—"

"Is Irma Mrs. Weir's daughter?"

"In course she is, but her mother's dead now. She was all the child she had. She didn't look one bit like old Parke Weir. Uncle Boaz, the nigger that come with 'em from way back yonder, says old Parke was Mrs. Weir's father's overseer, and she run away with him."

"He owns all these big cotton-fields and the cattle I see yonder? He must be rich."

"We all s'posed he was rich as butter. The niggers said he had a barrel full of gold, but it turns out he ain't. All he's got is muggaged—ain't that what you call it?—to his merchant in New Orleans. That's what's bad for poor Irma. She— But here I am tattlin' other folks' business to you, and I never saw you before. Who is you, anyway?"

With her bushy little head turned sideways like a bird's, she looked up at him with a sudden flash of suspicion in her keen eyes. He smiled, and sat down among the weeds, and drew her, half-reluctantly, to a seat beside him.

"I told you I was a good fairy come to help you; don't I look good?"

"Good?" She eyed him doubtfully. "You're good-lookin'. You're pretty as any picture I ever saw in my life—the prettiest man I ever did see; but then I ain't ever seen any nice men; and Irma ain't neither. She dreamed of one, and drawed and painted him like she dreamed. If it was you goin' to marry Irma now! Say, won't you?"

A sudden eager light leaped into her eyes, as she jumped up and stood before him. "Won't you come and take her away from old Vanhorn, and marry her? Come right now. May be the Blessed Virgin sent you. Come, or it'll be too late,'"

He laughed, and shook his curly head.

"Not I, my little maid. I wouldn't marry a princess—unless she had lots of money, and would give it all to me, and let me 'gang my ways.'"

The girl looked steadily into his handsome, lightly sneering face as he sat, with his head thrown back against the cottonwood-tree.

"No, you don't look good," she said, "pretty as you are. You may go back to the woods or the clouds, or wherever you came from. I'm goin' back to the house. It's all over, may be, and—"

"No, don't go," he pleaded, catching her hand. "Sit down and don't be angry with me, little darling—what's your name?"

"Dusky," she said; relenting after a minute. It was hard to resist those eyes.

"Well, sit down again, and tell me, Dusky—tell me about Irma. I am deeply interested. May be I can help you, I couldn't marry her because I'm a poor devil, and I'm not good a bit, to tell the truth—not good enough for your Irma. Besides, if I ran away with another man's bride the law would get after me."

"The law! The law must be an awful thing. I never heard about it till these late days. It's the law what's the matter up yonder. It's got Irma's father in jail, and Irma's got to marry to git him out."

"In jail?"

"Yes, that's what old Vanhorn told her when he come yisterdy. In jail down in the city, or 'rested, or somethin' for forgery, he said. He brought a letter from her father, sayin' she could save him, and she must. She must marry old Van, and then old Van would pay him out of his scrape; and he'll make such a good, rich husband, and had such a fine house in the city, his kiss. Come, now," he went on, shrinking a little before the girl's strange, fixed look, "it's too late to kick in the traces. You're harnessed too snug for that. Mr. Vanhorn, she'll kiss you now like a dutiful wife, I'm sure."

The wife stood motionless as a stone image—only her panting breast and white, parted lips showed emotion. She looked at the bridegroom as he stepped toward her, but did not stir.

But when he laid his hands upon her, his touch seemed to explode the pent-up feeling within her. Deceived, trapped, wrecked—you saw her sense of it all, in the gleam that darted from her dark eyes. It was the desperate look of a nettled tigress. It was a tigress bound, too, which she gave when his arm circled her neck. It failed to shake him off. She looked wildly round. Her eye caught the gleam of a pair of scissors lying on the table by her. Quick as thought, she snatched them up, and buried the steel blades in the neck of her embracer.

The blood burst in a bright, red jet all over her white face and black dress. Vanhorn staggered and dropped on a chair.

"She's killed me," he muttered. "She's cut the jugular!"

The girl, with the red blood-stains on her ghastly face, stood staring at him a second, then she rushed from the room and flashed past Vane like an arrow on her way to the bayou.

"She's goin' to drown herself," cried Dusky, starting after her, but a clutch of the arm restrained her.

"Bring the brandy," shouted Weir, in her ear.

Vane ran alone after the frenzied girl. She had reached the bank of the bayou when he came up with her. As she sprang to the edge, he caught her in his arms, and held her back. She turned on him, like a wildcat at bay. But at the same instant, there was a livid flash of lightning, and she saw the face of a stranger.

"Don't kill yourself. Escape in the skiff there. They will think you are drowned. I will row you out of sight in—"

But before he could finish the sentence, she had leaped into the boat. Before he could spring in after her she had pushed the skiff from the bank. With swift, practised strokes she sent it flying around the black current. In a moment it had swept around the bend and was out of sght.

Vane stood still in surprise. A stunning peal of thunder aroused him; the great drops began to fall.

"This is a cool proceeding, I must say," he exclaimed. "Shall I take my revenge by telling on her, and having her pursued, or shall I keep her secret, and let them think she drowned herself? There's her lace cape where she dropped it at the water's edge. They won't know how she got away. They'll be sure to think she flung herself in the bayou. I believe I'll keep her secret. Some time, it may be amusement or profit to me to know it. She's no common woman; she'll have no commonplace fate. We shall meet again. She's welcome to my skiff, I'll borrow another, or, press one. They'll think I tramped here on foot. Wonder if old Van's dead? He lied like a pig!"

He turned toward the house, where lights were moving rapidly before the windows and noises of feet and excited voices could be heard above the rain.

CHAPTER II.

The girl in the skiff did not heed the rain. It cooled her burning head and washed the blood-stains from her face. The summer shower did not last long. The clouds parted; the moon and stars appeared and gave light enough to allow Irma to guide her boat.

Thick woods crowded up to the edge of the steep bank on either side. She could hear the hooting of owls, the cries of wild animals that prowl and feed in the night-time. Before that long night was over, she several times passed fields and farm-houses. She heard the cocks crowing for midnight, the barking of dogs. She listened apprehensively as she passed, fearing to hear the clang of pursuing horse hoofs. The bayou was so winding they could cut her off by land and overtake her if they knew—if that young stranger had betrayed her, as it was most likely he had.

All night her brain was in a tumult. She heard the wild noises of the woods, the gurgle of the bayou, the leap of the fish, the splash of the alligator. She heard them as one hears sounds in a dream. But always she was hearing the cry, "I am killed!" always she was feeling the hot spurt of blood in her face.

Had she killed him? Wildly she prayed that it was not so. She had not meant to kill him. It was a frenzied impulse. They had deceived her—betrayed her—outraged her woman's in- monotonous life except to educate her child. For Irma, the man had never shown any tenderness. It was only the sense of duty, inculcated by her mother, that induced her to sacrifice herself for him—to save him from beggary—from imprisonment, as she thought. It was this and the constant, wearing importunity of the two men, and her own utter ignorance of love, of marriage, and of the difference between men.

Then she was wild to escape from her life in that dreary bayou land—in that old rat-haunted, death-saddened black house among the weeds and the moss-hung trees. Life there had become intolerable since her mother died. Anything was better than to drag out her days there—anything except to have that red, coarse man put his arms around her and kiss her. If marriage meant that, then marriage was not to be endured. If it meant only that she should keep his house and look after his servants or even do drudge work for him, why, she could do this—without pleasure indeed, but without pain. And to this girl, brought up in solitude by a sad-eyed moth er, life did not mean happiness—only resignation.

And yet Irma had naturally a buoyant nature. She had the poet's soul—quick to respond to the touch of beauty or kindness. She was gifted, though she did not know it. Only one had known it—her mother. And she had sighed that it was so.

"All the harder will be her woman's lot," she had said to herself when she first came across Irma's little book, scribbled full of strange, rhymed thoughts and fragmentary fancies. "It would have been better if I had never taught her to read—never unpacked that trunk of old books."

But these old books had been Irma's best comforters—her only friends. Their voices came to her now as she glided down the murky bayou with the day dawning in the flushed east, the constellations breaking up and the moon paling to a dim, white ghost.

The morning came cool and fresh. The birds awoke in the wet boughs and burst into happy songs. Some of them began fluttering about among the wild grape-vines and paw-paw bushes to get their breakfast. Their darting wings and merry twittering stirred her into sympathy with their delight. In spite of that vision of blood—in spite of the strangeness and desolateness of her situation—floating down where she knew not, without money, or friends, or purpose, and with a dreadful fear hanging over her—in spite of all this, Irma felt the thrilling sweetness of the dawn and the satisfaction of the birds over their plentifully spread breakfast.

She even felt like sharing the breakfast. She let her boat graze the bank while she pulled the clusters of grapes from the vines, that swung down to the water's edge. As the sun rose higher, she felt its rays upon her face and became conscious that she was bare-headed.

"What shall I do for a covering for my head?" she thought, and then she remembered having seen a straw hat lying in the bottom of the boat. It was Vane's hat. He had taken it off to fan away the mosquitoes that began to sing toward sunset, and he had flung it down when he left the boat to reconnoitre. As he stooped to pick it up she saw a straw satchel containing Vane's lunch—some crackers, cheese, apples, and a bottle of wine.

"I have run away with that poor bank looked curiously at the little craft with its female occupant, but nobody hailed her and she spoke to no one.

Presently, the houses began to be nearer together. Then Irma heard the clink and whirr of machinery—and here was a mill—a factory, with cottages clustered about it. It proved to be the outskirt of a town. Here were the stores ranged along the river; yonder was a tall church-steeple, pointing skyward. It was the first town Irma had ever seen. She looked with awe at the church-steeple and at the wide-piazzaed, showily painted hotel. But she had the inherited instinct of quick wit and self-possession. Besides, she had been the constant companion of a cultivated mother, who had once been used to good society, though she would not talk much about this to Irma. But Irma was safe not to betray much ignorance or trepidation. She determined to land and find out when the next downward bound steamboat was due at this place.

"The 'Monsoon' is due here now," the man said to whom she put the question. "I expect every minute to see her smoke around the bend. Are you going to the city?"

"Yes."

"Aren't you afraid of the yellow fever? It's above here, and it's in New Orleans too. Our folks are as scared as death of the boats, and there's talk of making them stop landing and strewing the fever. One of 'em stopped just below here night before last, and buried a yellow corpse in a sand bank. I doubt if the grave was three feet deep. The law ought to put a stop to such as that."

"I don't feel afraid of the fever. I have business that obliges me to go to New Orleans—and further perhaps. I need money, too. What will you give me for my skiff? It is of no more use to me now. It is a good one, as you see."

The man looked at the boat with a critical eye, stepped into it and examined the bottom.

"Why, yes. She seems a tight little craft," he said. "I don't want her myself, but I know a man that'll likely buy her if you ask a fair price."

"I wish you would let him know," Irma said, "we won't quarrel about the price."

The man nodded and went away. He returned soon with a wiry, keen-eyed individual who seemed more curious to know about Irma than to examine the boat. He asked her half a dozen questions and looked sharply, almost suspiciously, into the fair face under the man's Panama hat. She parried or answered his questions with her inborn tact, and presently succeeded in selling him the skiff for fifteen dollars. With part of the money, she bought, at the nearest shop, a black ribbon for the hat, a brown veil, a linen ulster and some underclothes, with a little leather valise to put them in.

Meantime the sun had set, and around the deep bend in the river could be seen the smoke of the approaching steamer. She rounded the curve. Irma, holding her valise, stood on the bank waiting. She was only a third-class boat—the water was low, and larger craft could not ply the river, but she was the largest boat Irma had ever seen. Her heart beat fast when the clerk handed her on board. Awhile later he came to her in the cabin.

"I am sorry we have not a state room to offer you," he said. "They are all occupied by families, too. There is one indeed which has a lady only in it, but she is sick."

"If she is willing, I will share the room with her," Irma said.

The clerk hesitated.

"She has the fever; she has been taken down with it since she came on board," he said at length.

"Then I can perhaps be of service to her."

"But—it may be yellow fever, miss," the clerk said in a low tone, with a furtive look about him. "Mind, I don't say it is."

Irma was silent. She had never seen real yellow fever, but her mother had died of swamp fever—its counterpart, and she had nursed Dusky through an attack of it.

"I will share the room if the lady is willing," she said.

The clerk nodded without speaking. Presently he said:

"Please don't speak of the lady's having the fever to any of the passengers. It might alarm them. And mind, I don't say it is yellow fever. Number five is the room."

He did not offer to show her to it. She took up her valise and opened the door of number five. The first sight that met her eyes was a young face, deeply flushed, with disheveled dark hair and eyes glassy and wild-looking. The girl was not conscious, however. As Irma approached her and put the tangled hair from her forehead, she looked up and moaned out:

"Water, for mercy's sake. I have had no cool water. They let me lie Don't die and leave me alone—all alone," she pleaded. "Alfred is dead. Harold has forsaken us. I have only you."

Again she would break into a tender smile and cry:—

"My love, how beautiful you are! How I love your violet eyes and gold-brown hair—so much prettier than mine. No, we can't marry yet—I know it. You must first make me a little home for father and you and me. And I must help you. Oh! I wish one could earn money faster. Teaching is such weary work."

Then she would moan out:—

"Oh! Harold, my brother, why don't you write at least? Are you alive? Why don't you come? Don't you see you are breaking our father's heart?"

Irma's eyes dropped tears upon the girl as she nursed her. These broken utterances revealed such a sorrowful past. It stirred her heart with sympathy such as she had never known before.

"Oh! let her live, sweet Virgin," she whispered, with that instinct of prayer which comes to all—even to half-pagan creatures like Irma. "She will be my friend. I have never had any friend but my mother. We will work together; we will live together."

But she felt there was no hope. The fever was a consuming fire. It scorched up that young life before her eyes.

At last, as the gray dawn looked through the blinds, the crisis came. The sick girl had been tossing from side to side in racking agony; now, half-springing up, she gave a deep gasp, and the bedclothes were dyed with the ominous death sign—the black vomit.

Irma shuddered, but the poor patient was instantly easier. She became quiet, the fever seemed to subside. Slowly the flame died out, but with it died the girl's strength and life. She feebly raised her lids—the wild light of delirium was no longer in those lovely eyes.

"I am dying," she whispered. "I know you. You have nursed me all this dreadful night. Tell me your name and where you are going."

"My name is Irma Weir. I am going somewhere—I don't know yet—to try to make my own living. I am alone in the world."

"If I could live we would be friends, Irma. Our fates are alike. I have no one to care for me—no relation but one, and he may be dead. I have not heard from him for years. My name is Aimee Brazeale. I lived in Marion Parish. My father was long an invalid. He died a month ago. I was on my way to the home of a schoolmate of my mother to teach in her family—music and French. I have never seen her, but she wrote kindly.

Irma, kneeling by her, did not stir for a moment. Then she rose and laid the dark head straight upon the pillow, and made upon the girl's forehead the sign of the cross. She was almost as deathlike as the corpse when she opened the state-room door. The trim quadroon chambermaid was passing. Irma beckoned and she stopped in a half-hesitating way, but did not approach any nearer.

"You want something?" she asked, with the accent of the French creole.

"The young lady in here is dead," Irma said.

"Oh, my God, don't speak so loud, mees. Te passengere weel hear. Tey don' know te poor ladee is seeck, let lone die wit tat bad feve. Tey weel be scare of teir lifes. Tey weel leaf te boat."

"Will you not come and help me attend to the body?"

"Me! Oh! mees I cannot. I haf no time."

"You are afraid."

"It ees no shame to be fear of Yellow Jacque. I haf tat feve once when I was leetle so. My God! I 'member him well. I not wan' him no more. I haf hear of peoples haflin' him twice—tree times."

"Will you send the clerk to me, or the captain?"

"Tey can do noting. And tey is all put out—mad as Beelzebub. Te boat haf been all night in tis meeserble sand-bar. Te water is so low. I tole te captain how 'twou' be, but he say te Monsoon ca' make one las' trip. And here she now—stuck in san' like rat in trap, when we ought to be away down in Mississip. An' te sun so hot, and now a corpe on te boat—a feve corpe too—my God, it is bad!"

"Have we passed Illysandra yet?"

"No, we haf pass noting. We have stuck here."

"They will take the body of the young lady to her friends?"

The quadroon shrugged her shoulders.

"You see how hot it ees, and all tese passengere—women an' cheelden? You tink tey can keep a feve corpe? They mus' bury it when night come. And you mus' not talk, mees. You mus' stay inside your room. I am fear tey will not like you to come to table. I weel tak' your veetles to you. Tere is come some ladees now. Weel you please shut te door, mees?"

Irma shut the door and turned to the dead girl upon the narrow berth.

"I must dress you for your burial by myself, poor girl," she said.

She ran her hand beneath the pillow and found the tiny purse and Aimee's key. She unlocked the old-fashioned sole-leather trunk and raised the lid. The things inside were daintily arranged. The tray held small articles—handkerchiefs, collars, ties, boxes, etc., faintly scented with violet. The lower part held underclothes of fine white material and a few dresses all black and white. Irma took a white cashmere, prettily but plainly made, trimmed with folds of white crape.

"I will dress her in this," she said. "I fancy it was meant for her wedding dress. Here is a white satin sash and white silk stockings folded up with it."

She set about her task of dressing this bride of death (who perchance had now met the dead lover whose picture lay on her breast), putting on her pure linen undergarments and the white crape and cashmere dress, plaiting her long hair and tying it with white ribbon. She cut off one thick tress, saying to herself:—

"She said she had perhaps one relation in the world, though she had not seen him for years—her brother. I think she meant. He may come some day and remorsefully seek for tokens of his sister, and be glad of this little silken lock."

When all was done as well as she could do it, Irma stood looking down upon the girl's face. It was a beautiful face, and the dead girl had been beautiful in life. Irma's own face was very pale, and her eyes were dim with tears.

"Aimee Brazeale," she said, "I have your picture around my neck. Let it be buried with me. And dress me in white. He liked me to wear white. If there is any life beyond, we will surely meet. Irma, don't cry—my friend. My friend of a day—I know you though—my soul knows you. I want to give you what little I have. My books and clothes, in that little trunk there. We are nearly the same size. I have a little money—under my head here—enough to bury me, and my key—Irma—oh! it is all dark—I can't see you. Good-bye!"

Her utterances had been broken—separated by gasping breaths. She ceased now to speak and her breathing became slower and more labored. Irma was rubbing her hands and limbs with brandy and quinine; but she gently motioned her to desist. She lay with her hand in Irma's, breathing her life away, while the day brightened at the narrow window and the shrill song of a mocking-bird came from the shore. Presently the watcher saw a convulsion pass over the now bloodless face. There was a long, deep, quivering breath, and Aimee Brazeale was dead.

Only the tortures of the mediæval rack are comparable to the agonies which many women suffer through the peculiar weaknesses and diseases of their delicate, feminine structure. Nothing less than unbearable torment would induce sensitive-minded women to submit to the intolerable methods of the average doctor in dealing with diseases of this nature.

That there is "a better way" than these detestable "examinations" and "local applications" is a truth which some women have yet to learn, although thousands are already rejoicing in the knowledge. They have found in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription the one unfailing remedy which heals feminine weaknesses at their very source. This marvelous "Prescription" restores absolute health to the internal organism; stops weakening drains and ulcerated conditions, gives elastic strength to the supporting ligaments, vitality to the nerve centers, and complete womanly vigor to the entire constitution.

It is the perfect fortifier and regulator of women at every critical period in their development; from the time when they merge into womanhood until the "change of life." It is the one medicine which makes motherhood safe and almost free from pain.

A lady living at 7 Park Avenue, Chicago, Ills., Mrs. Emily Howe, writes: "I, myself, suffered a long time from female weakness and seemed to be going into a decline. Took several bottles of your 'Favorite Prescription' and it saved me from a great deal of suffering. I now enjoy perfect health and will ever praise the wonderful efficacy of your medicine."

LIFE ON JUPITER.

How It Would Appear as Measured by Terrestrial Standards.

Judged by our terrestrial experience, which is all we have to go by, the magnitude of a planet, if it is to bear life resembling that of the earth, is limited by other considerations. Even Jupiter, which, as far as our knowledge extends, represents the extreme limit of great planetary size, may be too large ever to become the abode of living beings of a high organization. The force of gravitation on the surface of Jupiter exceeds that on the earth's surface as 2.64 to 1. Considering the effects of this on the weight and motion of bodies, the density of the atmosphere, the laws of pneumatics, etc., it is evident that Jupiter would, to say the very least, be an exceedingly uncomfortable place of abode for beings resembling ourselves. But Jupiter, if it is ever to become a solid, rocky globe like ours, must shrink enormously in volume, since its density is only 0.24 as compared with the earth. Now, the surface gravity of a planet depends on its mass and its radius, being directly as the former and inversely as the square of the latter. But in shrinking Jupiter will lose none of its mass, although its radius will become much smaller. The force of gravity will consequently increase on its surface as the planet gets smaller and more dense.

The present mean diameter of Jupiter is 86,500 miles, while its mass exceeds that of the earth in the ratio of 316 to 1. Suppose Jupiter shrunk to three-quarters of its present diameter, or 64,800 miles, then its surface gravity would exceed the earth's nearly five times. With one-half its present diameter the surface gravity would become more than ten times that of the earth. On such a planet a man's bones would snap beneath his weight, even granting that he could remain upright at all! It would seem, then, that, unless we are to abandon terrestrial analogies altogether and "go it blind," we must set an upper limit to the magnitude of an inhabited planet, and that Jupiter represents such upper limit, if indeed he does not transcend it.—Popular Science Monthly.

QUAINT DEVICES.

Some of the Articles Which Are Passing or Have Passed Away.

In England they have flails, hop poles, large wooden rattles, smock frocks and water, for mercy's sake. I have had no cool water. They let me lie here and famish for a drink."

Irma sprang up in haste and seized the empty pitcher. She succeeded in getting it filled with ice water and brought this and a glass of cracked ice to the fever-stricken girl. She let her drink as much as she thought was safe, and then, kneeling by her, gave her bits of the chipped ice. As the cool particles melted between her burning lips, she lifted her long-lashed eyelids and thanked Irma with an eloquent look. She had beautiful, dark eyes; they held a history within their sad depths. As Irma bathed her hands and face, she said earnestly:—

"Don't stay with me. It is the yellow fever. You will take it. They are all afraid of me."

"I am not afraid," Irma said. "And it would not matter much if I took the fever. There is no one to care."

"Are you like me, then—have you no friends?"

"None," Irma answered. "Don't trouble about me. Can you not sleep a little?"

She did drop to sleep after a time, and while the fitful slumber held her, the summons to supper came, and Irma went to the table. She was hungry, but she could hardly eat, so novel was the sensation of sitting at a table in a boat, afloat upon the waters—a lighted, sparkling table with a row of strange faces about it. They all looked curiously at Irma, and she grew red and pale under their eyes. She wondered if anything about her betrayed the tragedy of last night. Could there be by any fatal chance, a blood spot still on her forehead? She did not know it was her own picturesque though unfashionable dress and coiffure—her unusual style of beauty which drew their attention. One does not often see such eyes as hers—dark, bright, soft, with that proud, yet shy appealing look. And the mouth, too, was proud and tender in its chiseling. The girl had the look of a child-queen appealing to her people in her distress. But she was unconscious as any child.

She saw a man bend and whisper to a blase woman at his side. Then they both looked at her, and the lady smiled a scornful smile, and said quite audibly:—

"She looks like a runaway gipsy. I should not wonder if——"

Irma did not hear the rest of the sentence. Her tea seemed to choke her. She rose and slipped out upon the guards and stood looking at the flashing star-gleams in the water below, and the white path of foam in the wake of the vessel. She wondered if it would not be better to cut short the riddle of her life by leaping into the night-lighted waters. Where was she going? How was she to live?

A moan inside recalled her sick room mate to her mind. She turned and opened the door that gave upon the guards and went in. She found the girl unconscious. She remained so all night, with but few and brief glimmers of reason. It was a trying night to Irma. No one came near to help her nurse the delirious, the dying girl. She summoned the stewardess, but that functionary had a dozen excuses. She asked for the doctor, he was sick himself, she was told. Irma was half-worn out by what she had gone through, but she had superb young strength, and excitement and sympathy sustained her.

Sometimes it took all her strength to hold the patient in bed. She raved of her father, never seen her, but she wrote kindly. I fancied it would be pleasant to live with her; Irma, will you write to her and tell them why I did not come? They are looking for me on this boat. They live on this river. It can't be far to their place; but if we had come to it, the clerk would have surely let me know. Will you remember the address—Colonel Preston C. Fontenoy, Illysandra. They may put my body off there, but I don't know. They bury the yellow fever dead at once, and in secret. Let them put me anywhere: it doesn't matter. Bury me as near as they like to the river. I lived by a river when I was a child. My mother is buried there, and my lover—my Al-

Delicate children! What a source of anxiety they are! The parents wish them hearty and strong, but they keep thin and pale.

could do it, Irma stood looking down at the dead girl. But for the saffron stamp of the Yellow Death, the face would have looked beautifully life-like. Somehow it touched a chord of memory in Irma's breast.

"Have I seen some one who looked like her, or only dreamed of some one?" she mused.

It was past mid-day before the boat got off the sand-bar. Then it was found that she must stop at the first landing to have some part of her machinery repaired which had been broken or jarred out of order in the efforts to get her off the bar. She was still at this landing when night came on. The weather was very warm, and the door of Irma's state-room opening on the cabin had to be kept shut. The door giving on the guards was partly Venetian blinds. These were turned so as to keep the room as cool as might be. There was no more ice on board, but Irma sprinkled fresh water all about, and she emptied Aimee's little cut-glass bottle of violet essence upon the body. Yet decay went on with fearful rapidity. When the man came to measure the body for the coffin he said:—

"This can't possibly be kept out of the ground two hours longer. It is filling the boat with death."

Irma had given the little purse to the clerk and told him in reply to his questions that the dead girl had no relations excepting her, and had been going to teach in a gentleman's family. She saw by the relieved look on his face that he felt there was small ceremony needed in this case.

About midnight poor Aimee in her rude coffin was taken out by the door that opened on the guards with as little noise as possible, carried on shore and buried in the sand underneath a willow tree. Irma was not allowed to go on shore. She leaned over the guards and watched this sad, hurried burial by the light of the waning moon on the lonely bank of the river.

It was soon over; the men returned to the boat to take additional drinks of strong liquor and change their clothes. Irma, utterly exhausted, lay down on the upper berth and slept till daylight. She had said to the clerk, "Put me off at Illysandra." She had suddenly made up her mind to stop and see Aimee's friends instead of writing to them. Perhaps she herself might find something there to do. At any rate it was as well to stop. She had no destination in view. She had no purpose. And New Orleans was Vanhorn's home. If he was not killed, he would go back there, and some day she would meet him and he would claim her—for revenge if nothing else. If he should hunt her down, he would find her as well at one place as another. She knew so little of the world and men and their motives that she could not guess what Vanhorn might do. And she had no idea what course she herself ought to pursue, or how to set about making a place for herself in this new, strange world she had entered. She was just adrift. The casual contact with Aimee had given her course a turn in this eddy. What would come of her stopping here? She had no idea, and she was too weary, too bewildered and too ignorant to form any plan.

The Origin of Kew Gardens.

Couriers could be dispatched to the ends of the land for the queen's floral bouquet, but meanwhile she had to wait, unless some obscure owner of a choice plant came forth to sacrifice her possession to the gratification of her ruler. Queen Elizabeth received many such voluntary contributions of flowers from her subjects, but the uncertainty of the time, manner and quality of the flowers was irritating to a queen of the English. In the winter the wild flowers of the fields and gardens withered, and the flower loving queen felt the loss more keenly than those less favored with the fortunes of life. With the wealth of an imperial nation at her back, she could not command the choice of flowers that a day laborer can obtain today.

Out of this royal necessity grew the most famous garden of the world. With her own hands Queen Elizabeth laid out the grounds that were to produce and fructify the flowers for her drawing room. She started to raise flowers for her own personal gratification and ended by producing flowers and plants for the millions. No single desire of an impetuous queen ever yielded better fruit. On Queen Elizabeth's little flower garden the nation gazes today with national pride. Its original purpose of supplying the royal table with cut flowers is still observed, but that is a small incidental feature of the Kew. The garden belongs to the nation, and it is the nation, the ignorant and unlettered as well as the wise and studious, that enjoys its fragrant flowers, its graceful trees and palms, and its balsamic herbs and plants.—Lippincott's.

large wooden rattles, smock frocks and shepherd's crooks, which are gradually disappearing. The use of the rattle for scaring beasts and birds must be very ancient. One such is mentioned in 1790, in the Transactions Archit. and Archæol. Soc. Durham and Northumb. iv., 296. Within my recollection nearly every Yorkshire farm boy had a large wooden rattle, or clacker, of his own making, which he used in his leisure time for his own amusement and to the disturbance of his neighbors. With these should be classed the old watchman's rattle (I used to visit an old lady who kept one in her bedroom for use in case of burglary), pillions (on which I have seen farmers' wives ride to market behind their husbands on horseback), spinning wheels, horn lanterns (in use long before the stamped tin lanterns), Italian irons and heaters (found in every house when I was a boy), upright dash churns (alluded to in the old song I have heard sung at "clippings?":

Instead of a churn she used an old boot,
And instead of a churn dash she ram'd in her foot,
Oh dear, what a wife had I!), salt boxes, which used to be hung up in nearly every farmhouse, in a recess near the chimney. Probably I am one of the last who have seen a performance on the salt box, and very clever and laughable it was. "'Tis 60 years ago:"

In strains more exalted the salt box shall join,
And clattering and battering and clapping combine.
With a rap and a tap while the hollow side sounds,
Up and down leaps the flap, and with rattling rebounds.

Milk kits have quite disappeared from this part of the country, and chopping blocks and knives, used for sausages and mince pies, are now rarely seen, instead of which the little machines sold by the ironmongers are used by every one.—Notes and Queries.

Careless Eating.

We cannot impress too strongly upon those who have the control of children the necessity of care being exercised in the manner in which food is administered. Often an otherwise careful mother, perhaps preoccupied with conversation or anxious to be free to do something else, to attend to her other household duties maybe, will give her child such large and frequent mouthfuls that after it has grown to the self feeding age the practice is continued and the habit becomes confirmed. Perhaps children are inclined to eat too fast. It is certainly a common fault and one which may be avoided by deferring the self feeding and letting the mother by patient deliberate feeding aid the child in forming correct habits. And again, this duty should never be left to an ignorant and thoughtless nurse, who may have reasons of her own for haste.

Care in this matter may seem to cost too much time, but the result will be worth all the expenditure. One of the many arguments against the presence of very little children at the common table is adduced by the fact that so many adults, even persons of culture, have wrong habits in eating, coupled with that of the imitative tendency of the little ones. Haste in eating is naturally accompanied by haste in feeding on the part of the mother or nurse, which is frequently the cause of the after habit in the child in taking too large a quantity in its mouth and swallowing it too fast.—New York Ledger.

Gaining in Interest.

The gospel temperance meetings being conducted by Messrs. Arnott and Karr are very largely attended, last Sabbath every seat being filled. Rev. Caleb Parker opened the meeting with prayer, after which Mr. F. Arnott delivered an address lasting some thirty minutes, on the "Power of Example." Mr. Arnott was particularly happy in the use of his illustrations, and the whole address, which was an able and forcible presentment of his subject, was listened to throughout with the closest attention by the large audience present. Rev. C. Parker spoke briefly along the sames lines, pointing out the great necessity for active temperance work, both by precept and example. Quite a number of those present remained after the meeting was dismissed and signed the pledge.

The Selby Cheese Factory.

We have before us the auditor's report of the Selby cheese factory for the year 1897. The total amount of milk received at this factory for the season was 3,695,665 lbs, and the amount of cheese made, 367,301

The campaign is being prosecuted with much vigor throughout the province and it is generally conceded that the Opposition will do well if they hold their own. The Hardy Government will be returned with a majority fully as large as they possessed in the last parliament—of this there is not a question of doubt.

In Lennox matters are proceeding very quietly, although both candidates are working hard. Mr. Aylsworth's prospects are brightening every day, and although in any event the contest will be close the indications are that the Reform candidate will have a majority of about 50. In the last election the fight in Lennox was a triangular one and cannot be taken as a criterion. In 1890 Mr. Aylesworth and Dr. Meacham were pitted against one another and the vote resulted as follows:

	Meacham.	Aylsworth.
Ernestown	357	422
Richmond	312	250
N. Fredericksburgh	166	177
S. Fredericksburgh	154	98
Bath	26	56
Adolphustown	77	71
Amherst Island	85	98
Napanee	264	242

In the election of 1890 Ralph Meredith was leading the Conservative forces, and appealed directly to the passions and prejudices of the people. Mr. Whitney has not the commanding ability of Meredith and it is not to be expected that a party can appeal to the people without a policy with any hope of success. Mr. Aylsworth stands to make large gains in Ernestown, Richmond, Adolphustown, Amherst Island, and Napanee, and all that is required to insure his election is work and vigilance on the part of his friends.

On Wednesday, the 23rd inst., Geo. H. Bertram, M. P., will deliver an address in the Brisco opera house, Napanee, at the hour of 2 p.m. Mr. Bertram is the gentleman who carried Centre Toronto in the recent bye-election, and who was chosen to move the address to the throne at the present session of the Dominion Parliament. As an orator he takes high rank and all who attend the meeting here on the 23rd inst. are assured of a rich intellectual treat.

In Addington Mr. F. S. Wartman is making a grand fight in the interest of honest government and the Reform stalwarts of this fine riding are confident of success. Mr. Wartman has just returned from a trip in the back of the county and reports the organization there as perfect. Wherever Mr. Wartman has gone he has made friends and the prospects of redeeming the riding were never better.

Mr. F. S. Wartman, and Mr. H. M. Deroche, Q. C., spent Monday in the Township of Kaladar and held meetings at Northbrooke in the afternoon and at Flinton in the evening On Tuesday they journeyed on to Barrie township, addressing a meeting at Harlowe in the afternoon and a monster rally at Cloyne in the evening, at which Mr. Thomas Symington was present. The meetings were all well attended and the utmost enthusiam prevailed, a pleasing feature being the number of ladies who graced the meetings with their presence. In all the places visited, and also in Kennebec, Mr. Wartman has made big gains on his opponent, and his election by a small majority is now assured.

After the meeting at Cloyne on Tuesday night Mr. Deroche started out in the face of a blinding snow storm en route for Amherst Island. As he had already driven twenty-five miles that day it is to be inferred he didn't require an opiate to woo him to sleep when he reached his destination. On Wednesday evening Mr. Aylsworth and Mr. Deroche addressed a large gathering of the electors on Amherst Island.

Public meetings in the interest of Bowen E. Aylsworth will be held at Roblin, on Monday evening, 21st inst., and at Selby, on Tuesday evening, 22nd inst. Addresses will be delivered by the candidate and J. M. Farrel, of Kingston, and Ex-Mayor Elliott, of Kingston.

"Only the Best" should be your motto when you need a medicine. Do not be induced to take any substitute when you call for Hood's Sarsaparilla. Experience has proved it to be the best. It is an honest medicine, possessing actual and unequalled merit. Be wise and prompt by the experience of other people.

MRS. ALICE MADDEN.

Newburgh, Feb. 11th, 1898.

Mr. Meacham's Meeting.

A well attended and orderly meeting in the interest of Dr. Meacham was held in the town hall here on Monday evening. The doctor addressed the meeting, recapitulating the old charges against the government and explaining his position in reference to the James Bay railway and the bonusing of iron. Mr. Thos. Symington was allowed a short time to address the meeting and delivered a stirring address bristling with incontrovertible facts, which the doctor in his reply did not attempt to combat.

The other young man has reached the shaving period, also, and after hearing the evidence the Magistrate dismissed the case. W. S. Herrington appeared for the Inspector and Mr. Haverson, of Toronto, for the defence.

Tea Meeting at No. 1.

A grand tea meeting will be given under the auspices of the Epworth League, in No. church, on Tuesday evening, the 22nd inst. No efforts are being spared by the committee to make this the "treat of the season." The services of Miss Allen, elocutionist, of Napanee, have, we understand, been secured for this occasion. This of itself bespeaks success. The music, as before announced, by the Napanee Glee Club, and a tea by the ladies of the congregation, will make up what promises to be a very enjoyable evening. Tickets, only 25 cents. M. S. Madole, chairman.

A New Dodge.

A new scheme is being operated by robbers. Two men travel together, one having a kodak or something resembling it. One of them goes to a farm house and tells the family that he is getting up a history of that section to publish in a leading paper and wants to make a picture of the family and buildings, telling the farmer it will not cost a cent. The family group themselves out in front and the operator is quite a while in getting a satisfactory picture. At last he is done, he takes his leave, telling them about what time they can expect to see the paper with it. During this time his confederate has looted the house, taking money, jewellery and watches. In one instance the kodak was a cigar box covered with leather.

Tory, 'Taint Like.

Everybody knows Eliakim Huff, and when he made his now famous prediction, in verse, on the eve of the last Dominion election that "Tupper must go, Tupper must go," it carried conviction to the hearts of the doubting ones. Mr. Huff noticed a paragraph in a Tory paper last week of the blizzard that was to overtake the Hardy Government on March 1st, and it moved him to the following:

Let the blizzard come,
Let the blizzard go,
It will leave all the Tories
Covered up in the snow.
It will be a cold time,
And who can but wonder;
The Tories will be all gone,
They'll be completely snowed under.
To speak of a Tory,
Don't you think it's profane?
The people all say
It's a very bad name.

and the amount of cheese made, 607,901 lbs. The average price per 100 lbs of milk paid patrons was 70 26/100 cents, and the average price per lb of cheese 8 82/100 cents. The amount of milk used to make 1 lb of cheese was 10.06 lbs. The receipts of the factory for the year were $32,402.06, and of this amount $25,967.01 was distributed among the patrons. The greatest amount of milk was received in the month of June, when 64,357 lbs were sent in. In July it dropped to 58,480, August 55,774, September 52,998, October 42,902, and in November 18,052. The last annual meeting of this factory was most successful. The old officers were re-elected as follows: Geo. Cleall, salesman; Ira B. Hudgins, sec y.-treas; A. Winters, auditor. The output of this factory this year was the largest in its history. The sales were about $4,000 more than ever before, and nearly $9,000 more than last year.

Rev. G. S. White's Visit to Rawdon.

The anniversary services held on the Rawdon Circuit, on Sabbath and Monday, Feb. 6 and 7, were an unqualified success. The Rev. G. S. White, D.D., of Napanee, delivered two wonderful sermons, selecting for his subject in the morning, "Transfiguration" and in the evening "Character." The eloquent Dr. held his immense audience spell-bound and the unanimous verdict of those who heard the sermons was that they were two of the most earnest appeals ever delivered in the church. On Monday evening our pastor, Rev. W. D. P. Wilson, L.L.B., called the audience to order and introduced the chairman, G. G. Thrasher, barrister of Stirling, who delivered a beautiful address on the subject, "Improving Life." Then the chairman introduced Dr. White who gave his very popular lecture "Luck and Pluck." All we have to say regarding the Dr. is the repetition of the words of the Queen of Sheba on her visit to Solomon as we have heard of the Dr. in the north and south in the east and west "But the half has never been told." The proceeds were $125. Great credit is due our pastor for the deep interest he has taken in the financial welfare of the circuit. During the past nine months all the debts on our churches have been paid and the circuit is in a flourishing condition. The parsonage trustees engaged Rev. G.S. White to deliver three lectures in aid of the parsonage fund the rev. gentleman selecting for his subjects "Temperance" he treated this subject on a scientific line showing the effects of alcahol on the brain, stomach, nerves, etc, the immense audience following the lecturer from church to church until the churches were unable to accommodate the vast multitudes who thronged to hear him. We hope the Dr. will visit us again in the near future and we promise him full churches.—Com.

Blacks That Are Black.

Three Favorites of the Diamond Dyes.

The Diamond Dye Blacks are scientific successes that are everywhere appreciated by the ladies.

Diamond Dye Fast Black for Wool stands ahead of all other wool dyes for fullness, richness and depth of color. All-wool goods when they have become rusty and soiled can be restored to a deep jet black, equal to the best French blacks, and fitted for long years of wear.

Diamond Dye Fast Black for Cotton and Mixed Goods is the only black in the world for dyeing cotton and all mixed fabrics. It gives a permanent and never fading color.

Diamond Dye Fast Black for Silk and Feathers is a triumph of the chemical art, and has surprised the world. All silk goods and feathers that are faded, spotted and soiled can be dyed a lovely jet black with this special dye, making old things look equal to new goods.

The Diamond Blacks are the best in the world. Ask for them and refuse all imitations and poor makes.

EXPRESS-IONS

A barrister at Brighton, Ontario, who is a Master of Arts, has just been convicted and fined $10 for using postage stamps the second time. He is no doubt a highly educated man, but he has still a lot to learn.

Some wag has said that a postage stamp is much like a baulky horse— the more you lick it the less it goes.

Dickens, in Phickwick, tells of the fate of the Etanville editors. We have no desire to follow in their footsteps.

Touch not pitch lest you be defiled.

"Dr. Meacham then took the platform" says the "Twinkler" in its report of the doctor's meeting here in the town hall on Monday night. We wish to assure Mr. Meacham's friends that he did nothing so base. The platform is still intact and the doctor took nothing away with him but what really belonged to him.

We hear so much of getting reports from an unbiased independent source that we take the liberty of quoting from the Twinkler's report the opening remarks of Mr. Meacham's address at the meeting here on Monday night:

"I want to commence with the remark that you are probably aware that the opposition in the Local House do not call upon the electors of questionability, and I do not believe that it is necessary to come before you people to night to convince you that there is nothing good in the Province of Quebec. I do not believe in the doctrines taught by the opposite party-men, who are neither knaves or fools; it is not that. We come before you with all the assurance that we should oppose the present government."

If our friend Meacham really used the words attributed to him, the great question arises, What was he driving at?

Will Dr. Meacham kindly favor us with his private opinion of "an independent report" of one of his speeches?

CHURCH OF S. MARY MAGDALENE—Sunday

KENNEDY HONORABLY ACQUITTED.

Paris Blue runs foul of Hawkshaw, the Detective. Coffee and Colic. Great Interest Evinced in the Case, —The Judge (A Scotchman, na doot) Discharged the Prisoner but warned Him not to do it Again. The Dignity of the Court Maintained by Confiscation.

(Special to THE EXPRESS, via the overland route, from our highly remunerated Collegiate correspondent.)

The very interesting trial of A. Howard Kennedy, charged with administering a dose of paris green to Frank S. McCoy on Dec 1st, 1897, was held in the Assembly Hall of the Collegiate Institute, on Friday, February 11th, at the hour of 2.30 p.m. There was a large crowd in attendance, giving an evidence of the deep interest taken in the case. High Chief Justice VanEvery presided. Messrs. Wilson and Gordon appeared for the prisoner, while Crown Attorney Miller, aided by Mr. Gandier, Q.C., conducted the case for the prosecution. Mr. Arthur Fennell acted as clerk, while J. F. O'Brien filled the position of crier. The other officers of the court were: L. File, Sheriff; T. C. Unger, Chief; A. Pringle and F. Girvin, Constables. The following gentlemen composed the jury: W. N. Gordanier, foreman; H. E. Asselstine, L. Wright, C. Wagar, C. Jennings, J. Hogan, E. Hough, A. Davis, C. Young, and F. Lapum.

The first witness called was F. S. McCoy, and being sworn on the following oath: "I hereby swear to tell what I've been told to tell, all I've been told to tell, and nothing but what I've been told to tell, so help me Rand and McNally's Atlas geography," Said he was 45 years of age. The prisoner poisoned him by putting paris green in coffee which he had for breakfast on the morning of Dec. 1st. He was sick for about a week. The prisoner had a grudge against him for poisoning a dog, and he did this to get even with him.

On being cross examined, he said "I am not acquainted with the symptoms of colic, and for all I know they might be the same as those of paris green." On being asked to describe the symptoms he had he gave merely those of colic.

The next witness for the Crown was Dr. G. L. Elliott. He swore he knew the prisoner and defendant, was present on the morning of Dec. 1st shortly after the poisoning. The prisoner was present also. He attended Mr. McCoy and got him around in about a week. On analyzing he found Mr. McCoy had been given a sufficient amount of poison to kill him, had he not been attended immediately.

On being cross examined he swore that he was an expert chemist but on being closely questioned as to the composition of paris green he became considerably mixed. His test for the presence of paris green being very unsatisfactory as was shown afterwards by Burrows' evidence, in the fact that he could not use glass in the test, as this article contains arsenic, a composite of paris green.

Mr. Jas. Russell on being sworn said he was a grocer and on the morning of Dec. 1st had delivered some groceries to Mr. McCoy's. He saw the prisoner preparing the poison and Mr. McCoy drinking it in his coffee.

This ended the case for the Crown.

At this point in the proceedings the Judge ordered a constable to wake up some of the jury.

The first witness called for the defence was the prisoner A. H. Kennedy. He swore he was forty years of age, was a detective employed by an agency in Toronto, superintended by Mr. Frank Burrows. He was in Napanee boarding at Mr. McCoy's and at the time in question and was working on the case of the Dominion Bank robbery. He bought the poison for Elliott and the latter administered it, and then accused him (Kennedy) of it and had him arrested. At the court witness produced a tin-type of Elliott.

Mr. Frank Burrows on being sworn said he was manager of a detective agency in Toronto. Mr. Kennedy was in his employ and he had always found him to be trustworthy. Mr. Kennedy had sent for him when he was arrested. He knew Elliott personally and said he had had dealings with him through detective work and that he had not the best reputation.

The last witness called was Mr. Thos. Lafferty. He swore he was employed by Kennedy to watch Elliott. The latter did not know this and consequently disclosed his secrets to Lafferty, who at the right time, gave the plans away to manager Burrows, and Elliott is now awaiting trial on a serious charge.

followed by Mr. Gandier Q.C., who made an excellent speech in favor of the Crown.

After the jury had been warned of their important task, they retired to an anteroom, where scales were previously provided for weighing the evidence.

During their absence D. Whiskin was arrested and on being asked pleaded guilty of contempt of court and being unable to pay his fine, his pockets were turned inside out and the contents confiscated. So much was found on his person that a basket had to be procured in which to keep it. The jury returned in about fifteen minutes with a verdict of "Not Guilty." The judge then discharged the prisoner honorably, but warned him if he ever came in contact with Canadian law again it might not go so easy with him. The court was then closed until the next session.

NOTES.

Cries of "order," and "less order," were continuously heard coming from the mouths of the lenghty constables.

Lafferty's latest achievement is trainer of "Hall's" hockey team.

Russell had to be proven sane before sworn,"

Elliott had certificates of his profession from "Idler's College, Selby," "Nonsuch College, Nowhere," and several other prominent institutions.

A ladder had to be brought to swear Chief Unger.

Gandier made a "corking" speech.

As the case for the crown rested largely on Elliott's evidence, his unsatisfactory and contradictory statements considerably weakened their case.

A Queer New England Betrothal.

Hawthorne found romance on the shores of old New England, and there is a good deal of it unminded in the modern life of the Yankees. The following story of love and marriage, strange as it may seem, is known to the writer to be true:

Years ago a summer boarder at a cottage on a point of land which formed the protecting arm of the harbor of a fishing town in Massachusetts was shown a girl baby only a few months old. He looked at the babe and admired; then said to the mother:

"Will you give me that babe for my wife?"

The mother had known the young man for several summers; she liked him, and therefore answered promptly, "Yes."

"Will you promise never to tell her that you have selected me as her husband?"

"Yes."

The conditions of the singular betrothal were observed. The girl baby grew up, and summer after summer the young man courted her. When she was 18, he married her, and not till then did she know that she had been betrothed to her husband while in her cradle. Can old romance be more romantic than this story of a New England fishing town?—Youth's Companion.

Stars, but Not In His Line.

"You referred to me this morning, sir," howled the eminent actor, "as 'the Algol of the theatrical profession!' Allow me to ask you, sir, if that is a miserable attempt to play upon the word 'alcohol,' as a reminder, sir, that I was once addicted to the excessive use of the intoxicating bowl!"

"By no means, sir," protested the newspaper man. "I meant by that expression to convey the idea that you were a 'variable star'—sometimes brilliant and at other times not so brilliant."

With a muttered apology the eminent actor turned on his heel and stalked away.

"And this," bitterly exclaimed the newspaper man, when alone again, "is what comes of giving a dramatic assignment to an astronomer!"—Chicago Tribune.

THE DOOR TO GOOD HEALTH

Is Through the Kidneys—Like a Well Planned Sanitary System They Keep the Body Human Healthy—Interesting Story From Quebec.

The kidneys have very appropriately been described as the sanitary system of the human body. Let them become inoperative and disease will quickly follow, and unless the obstructions are removed, death will be the result. Mr. D. J. Locke, of Sherbrooke, P. Q., suffered for years from complicated kidney trouble, and spent over $100 in efforts to secure relief; but no relief came until he used South American Kidney Cure. His statement is that four bottles completely cured him, and to-day he is in the enjoyment of sound health. In the most distressing cases this remedy

The Union Cheese Factory Report.

The annual meeting of the Union cheese factory was held at the factory on Thursday, the 17th inst., when fully 90 % of all the patrons were present. A very full and satisfactory report of the season's business was submitted by the auditor, Mr. W. R. Smith, and is as follows: The total milk received 1,881,754 lbs., which produced 185,972 lbs. of cheese, which realized $16,420.86. Average price received per pound of cheese 8.83 100. Average price paid patrons per 100 lbs. of milk, 69.97 100. Average pounds of milk per pound of cheese 10.118. The proprietor Mr. C. E. Bartlett was unanimously re-elected salesman, secretary and treasurer, and Mr. W. R. Smith, auditor for the ensuing year. All were unanimous in saying Mr. Smith's audit was the most complete and satisfactory ever submitted to the patrons of Union factory and that the meeting was one of the most pleasant and satisfactory ever held in connection with the old factory which has been in existance some thirty years. In addition to his audit Mr. Smith gave a comparative statement of all the surrounding factories which showed Union to stand the highest in that section. The meeting closed with a hearty vote of thanks to the chairman Mr. R. Brisco also to Mr. H. R. Smith, secy. of the meeting.

TERRORS OF RHEUMATISM.

A Remedy Which is Instantaneous and Permanent in effect—A Calgary Resident, Crippled for Three Years, Becomes Strong as an Athlete.

No subtle or mysterious force could be more miraculous in its effects than is South American Cure in all cases of rheumatism. James A. Anderson, of Calgary, N.W.T., says that seven or eight years ago he became afflicted with rheumatism, and for three years it made him a cripple, so that he had to use a stick to get about. In his own words: "I suffered untold misery, and though treated by the best physicians in the country, and I spent a term in the hospital, recovery seemed as hopeless as ever. A friend recommended South American Rheumatic Cure. It gave help immediately and after the second bottle I threw away my stick. To-day I am as strong as an athlete." Price 75 cents.

PRINCE EDWARD COUNTY.

Miss Pearl Valleau, Deseronto, has returned home after spending a couple of weeks very pleasantly with friends in town and vicinity.

Mr. Theodore Dodge, Milford, has been appointed clerk in the second Division Court of the county. He succeeds the late Mr. Henry Haight, who lately met his death in the deplorable accident on Brisben's hill.

Dr. Robinson, Consecon, has started for Klondike, via Vancouver.

One of the saddest deaths that has occurred for some time past is that of Frank Coolige, son of Mr. W. Coolige, Sophiasburg. He was a victim of pneumonia and but a few months past his twentieth year. Last October he married Miss Jessie Field, of Woodrows', and at her father's home he died Sunday, Feb 13th. Deceased taught the Union Vale School during the present term. He was a universal favorite and his early death is lamented by a young and old

ENTERPRISE.

A great work of grace has been in progress at Enterprise for the past four weeks. The Methodist church has been crowded each night with an anxious interested audience to participate in singing the gospel and listen to the old time truths. Over fifty have bowed at the altar as seekers and the church has been greatly awakened revived and equipped for service. The meetings have been conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. S. McMullen assisted by his people, to God be all the praise.

The following resolution was unanimously passed at the last Official Board of Centreville Circuit. "We the members of the Centreville Quarterly Official Board wish to hereby express our hearty appreciation of the work done in our circuit by our beloved pastor, the Rev. J. S. McMullen. We find that every line of our church work throughout the entire circuit is on the advance. We have much pleasure therefore in requesting our brother to remain with us for another year at a salary of six hundred and fifty dollars.

HOW TO BE BEAUTIFUL.

To be beautiful we must have pure blood and a clear skin. BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS purifies the blood and makes the skin bright and clear. It cures all skin and blood diseases. Witness the following: "I had scrofula on my face for some time, and could get no relief until I tried B.B.B. One bottle healed me and left no scars. It is the greatest blood purifier in existence."

PICTON.

The weather changes furnishes something new to speak of every day.

On Saturday Feb. 12th while in Picton, Mr. Albert Zimmerman, of Cressy, was seized with hemmorhage of the lungs. He made out to reach the office of Dr. Karn who succeeded in stopping the flow of blood. The patient was so weak that the doctor had him taken to a room in his house and carefully looked after as he said that a second attack was sure to follow, and on Monday morning about three o'clock a.m. when the doctor was away in the country attending a patient the bleeding began again and before medical aid could be procured the young man died.

The adjourned inquest mentioned in last week's issue opened promptly on Friday last 10 a.m. After all the witnesses had been sworn the jury retired to their room but soon returned with the verdict that Mr. Henry H. Haight met his death from furious driving by Harrison and Kellar. These two men had to furnish $1.000 bail and are next to appear before Police Magistrate Geo. Currie.

An enjoyable time was spent last Tuesday at a family gathering in the home of Mr. Wm. Robbins, of South Bay, to celebrat the seventy fifth birth day of his mother Mrs. M. Robbins who is enjoying good health. Her great grandson, son of Mr. Donald Haight, of Wellington, was present.

There was a very large market on Saturday potatoes sold for 60cts per bag, chickens 60 to 75cts per pair, turkeys 9cts per lb. apples $1.20 per bus. butter from 18cts to 20cts, eggs 14 to 26cts per dozen etc.

Business has been quiet with the merchants and is likely to continue so until after the approaching election.

The cost of remodelling the first Methodist church is estimated at about $12,000.

Of Interest To Men.

The attention of the reader is called to an attractive little book lately published by that eminent Expert Physician, G. H. Bobertz, M. D., 252 Woodward Ave, Detroit, Mich. This book is one of genuine interest to every man and its plain and honest advice will certainly be of the greatest value to any one desirous of securing perfect health and vigor. PLEASANT VALLEY.

Mrs. Ryerson Pringle has been spending a few days visiting her parents at Selby.

Miss Blanche Dupree had a quilting one day last week.

Mr. Tom Burley has been spending a week visiting Miss Pauline VanDeBogart. The roads being blocked he made an extended visit.

About thirty-five youngsters from the surrounding country occupied the home of W. Chamberlain on Wednesday evening. All report a good time.

Mrs. T. B. Chamberlain visited her sister Mrs Thompson, of Selby, last week.

Mr. Pringle, who has been on the sick list all winter, is able to be around again.

Roland Hawley had a bee drawing wood on Thursday.

Miss Thuiza Caffe has returned home after spending a couple of months visiting her parents and other friends at Big Creek.

Visitors,—Miss Maud Huffman, at J. R. Lochhead's; Miss Dollie Hawley, at F. VanDeBogart's; Mrs. Hambly, at W. Chamberlain's; Mr. Walter Russell, at Miss Carrie Sills'; Messrs. Shaw and Kingston, at S. X. Dupree's.

The grand concert of the N.H.S. held Friday last was a grand success. The debate was something of excellent character. Resolved that agricultural life tends more to virtue and nobleness than commercial or professional life. For the affirmative appeared, H. Lochhead, W. Snorey, S. Moore; negative, P. Quinn, L. Longmore, J. Kelly; Mr. H. Lochhead opened the debate in his usual good natured style closing with but a few points looking out for the return speech. Mr. Quinn for negative, although a farmer's boy, he called them almost everything, thus showing he never intends to stay on the farm. W. Shorey opened his speech like Lord Chatham if time permit he may occupy such a position. Next on negative side came L. Longmore. This young man shows from the very start that he will some day become a public speaker. He had a few notes from which he spoke thus showing he is trying to make his way in life. I myself Mr. Editor would appreciate this more if all the scholars henceforth would try this young man's plan. Miss Moore stepped to the platform with an air of "Mrs. Charles Crowley" showing she had been there before. The paper rendered by this young lady was excellent. Miss Jennie Kelly rendered her paper in excellent style showing that there was thought on the subject. Mr. Quinn then replied for the negative. Followed by Mr. Lochhead who upset all the former's points by saying no matter whether hay-seeds or not they are the men of the country. Miss Edna Hinch gave an instrumental solo. Miss Edith Beeman an instrumental solo. A Speech by the Secretary of School Board, Mr. Glenn, sounded like old times. Miss S. Moore presided at the piano and all sang the National Anthem.

Mrs. Sarah Dunlop and son Frank arrived on Saturday on the 5 p.m. train from South Manchester county on a visit to her sister Mrs. John Shorts. Since starting their health has improved greatly. They speak in high terms of Canada in its prosperity. They are much delighted with our winter, the like of which is unknown to them in the South.

LENNOX FOR AYLSWORTH

MONSTER LIBERAL RALLY,

EXCELLENT ADDRESSES BY D. W. ALLISON, GEO. H. BERTRAM AND THE CANDIDATE.

The monster Liberal rally in the opera house here on Wednesday afternoon in the interest of Bowen E. Aylsworth, the coming member for Lennox, was a happy augury of success. There were fully 500 people present and the utmost harmony and enthusiasm prevailed. Quite a number of ladies graced the occasion with their presence. A large number were present from the surrounding district and a more successful meeting could not be wished for.

Mr. Thos. Symington, president of the Lennox Reform Association, acted as chairman in a very acceptable manner. In his introductory remarks the chairman was particularly happy, and his reference to D. W. Allison, Esq., Ex-M.P., as the "Old Liberal War Horse of Lennox" elicited rounds of applause.

D. W. Allison, on coming forward to address the audience, was given a warm reception. He said that he was introduced under a new title to-day—that of an old war horse. The three essentials of a good war horse were strength, speed and endurance. He did not possess the strength of former years, or the speed, nor yet the endurance, but one thing he was certain of, he had all the grit he ever had. (applause.) Mr. Allison then turned his attention to the parrot cry of the opposition, "it is time for a change," and showed how fallacious it was when applied to the Hardy Government. He applied the cry to an old and well tried captain of a steamer plying on one of our great lakes. This captain had managed his ship wisely and well, he knew all the hidden shoals and dangerous reefs, he was conversant with the internal economy of the boat. Would it be wise to discharge this old servant and hand the ship over into the keeping of an untried man, simply because the old captain had been a long time in your service. He referred to the neighboring town of Desoronto, which stood as a tribute to the good management of the Rathbun Co. E. W. Rathbun, as the head of that company, had established large manufacturing industries, he didn't care about some trifling mistakes. The Government were not infallible. When men become infalliable they should be translated to another sphere.

Mr. Bertram then turned his attention to the Boundary Awards Case. Owing to the present government we have a province that extends from the fresh waters of Lake Ontario to the salt waters of Hudson Bay. In that district, which was secured for Ontario by the vigilance of the Liberal Government we have valuable mineral lands, great timber limits, and the time was coming when those lands will be found to be of enormous value. Away back 150 miles removed from population lie thousands of acres of good agricultural land, equal to any in the province. In that disputed territory is to be found millions of feet of timber land where the woodsman's axe has never been heard. They were all conversant with the fight Sir Oliver Mowat and Mr. Hardy made to secure those lands to Ontario. When the Government of Sir John Macdonald was endeavoring to rob this province of this valuable heritage the Liberals fought him from court to court until the question was finally settled in Ontario's favor by the Privy Council. The Opposition favored the handing over of these lands to the Dominion. Look at what the Ontario Government secured for the people in retaining that enormous arena for Ontario. From that district they had already received over a million and a half of dollars of revenue. Last year alone the revenue from these lands had amounted to $200,000. These two facts alone should insure the return of the government. (1) The spotless character of the men. (2) The Government had added largely to the area of the province and given us a revenue that will last for many years to come.

Mr. Bertram dealt with the time for a change cry in an effective manner. It was time for a change last year at Ottawa because the Government was corrupt and so disunited that they could not carry on the affairs of the crown The Hardy Government, however, is working in harmony in the best interest of the province and the people were not going to run the risk of making a change. It was simply a parrot cry with nothing at the back of it. The Conservatives were boasting that Whitney would sweep the province. They all remember the cry! "Mowat must go," but he didn't go till he got ready. The Conservatives cannot sweep Ontario, because the people won't let them. This reminded him of a story told by Dr. Dewart. An Irish Fenian was boasting how he had perfected plans for smashing old England. The Fenian said: We have 20,000 men in the north, 20,000 men in the south, 20,000 in the East and 20,000 in the west. We are going to get those men together and hurl them at England and dismember her. A friend asked him why in thunder he didn't get his men together then and commence operations. The Fenian replied sadly, "The police won't let us." The people of Ontario won't let Whitney get his men together In Mr. Meredith the Conservatives had an able leader, who never went to the people without a policy of some kind. He was backed by all the influence of the Dominion Government but he could not win. Was it reasonable that Whitney, who is a much weaker man, without a policy or influence can succeed where Meredith failed.

Mr. Bertram dealt briefly with the educational system and the question of a

To the Electors of Lennox

GENTLEMEN,—

Having been chosen by the Liberal Party of Lennox as their candidate at the next election, I wish publicly to thank the party for the confidence reposed in me in tendering me the nomination. Since the meeting of the convention at which I was so chosen I have visited many parts of the riding and have met with most encouraging support, both from Liberals and old time Conservatives.

I have been asked to outline my policy, and in brief I may say that it shall ever be my policy to study the needs of the people of this Province in general and of this riding in particular, and to use my best endeavors to advance what I believe to be the best interests of my constituents. I unhesitatingly announce my faith in the general policy of Mr. Hardy and his colleagues, because I believe it has been, and is, their aim to conduct the affairs of the Province in an honest and business like manner. The very fact that the Opposition has failed to point out a single instance of corruption during a period of twenty-five years is conclusive evidence to my mind of the purity of the adminstration. While I am a believer in the ability, honesty and integrity of the present Government, I reserve to myself the right to criticize that Government in all matters when I feel it is to the public interest to do so. I most emphatically repudiate any intention upon my part to blindly follow any man or any set of men.

I have also been asked my views upon the question of granting bonuses to the manufacturers of iron. I am not in sympathy with this policy, because I do not believe it to be to the best interests of the majority of the people of this province, and if elected I will use my influence against the present bonus system.

Between now and the day of the election I hope to have an opportunity of discussing the public questions of the day with all of the electors of Lennox, and to carefully weigh any suggestions relating to the public good, as my sole aim. if elected, will be to honestly represent the people of Lennox in all matters coming before the House.

Thanking you for the generous support accorded me in the past, which I shall confidently rely upon in the future, I remain, dustries in that town, he had branches of business in other places and it was due to his efficient management that the concern had been so successful. Suppose we were to say that Mr. Rathbun had managed this business too long, that it was time for a change, and we placed Mr. Whitney and Dr. Meacham at the head of the concern would you look upon it as a good change. The Province of Ontario is an immense business concern far exceeding the Rathbun Co. in importance. Its resources are great and the details of the business are intricate and difficult to master. If Whitney and Dr. Meacham are not capable of running the Rathbun concern, could you trust them to run the affairs of this province. Mr. Whitney never held a portfolio in any government. There is not a man in his party who has held a portfolio in the Ontario Legislature. The Conservatives have had no experience in Ontario affairs. Mr. Whitney and his right bower, Col. Mathieson,—he called him Col. Mathematician—had proclaimed to the people in their tour just prior to the last session of the legislature that the government would have a deficit of $600,000 last year. When the House met they found that the government had a surplus of $5,000,000. In view of this he thought that the average school boy was better able to judge of these things than Mr. Whitney and Col. Mathematician. Mr. Allison here told a humorous story of the old U. E. L. days and passed on to the timber question. He said that he had had some experience in the timber business and knew what he was talking about. Mr. Whitney and Dr. Meacham aver that our timber limits are used up and the province is on the verge of direct taxation. How do they know this? An experienced man could not inspect more than 100 square miles of timber limits in a year. We had 100,000 square miles of standing timber limits and consequently it would be necessary for Mr. Whitney and Dr. Meacham to spend 100 years in the woods to find this out. Personally they know nothing about it. Mr. Allison quoted from a pamphlet issued by the Dominion Goverment under the approval of Her Majesty's Minister for the colonies, showing that there is sufficient timber limits in Ontario to last for centuries to come.

Bowen E. Aylsworth made a brief and telling speech. He said that he was in hearty sympathy with the policy of the Hardy Gouernment. He believed the government had managed the affairs of the province for the past 26 years economically and well. He dwelt on the dishonest manner in which Dr. Meacham made comparisons. The John Sandfield Macdonald Government was in power four years. The doctor lumped the expenditure of the Macdonald Government for four years and divided it by four and gives the result as the average expenditure of the government. As a matter of fact the expenditure of the John Sanfield Government during the last year of its administration was more than double that of the previous years. Mr. Aylsworth detailed the way the government had assisted agriculture and gave a brief summary of some of the beneficient legislation passed by the government. He showed up the piggery cry of the Opposition in its true light. He showed that Dr. Meacham had opposed the new County Council Act which was a move in the direction of economy. This act had saved this county last year $700.

Mr. Symington, in introducing Mr. Bertram, referred to the deep interest taken in the election by the ladies. He also paid a high tribute to the Hon. John Dryden, Minister of Agriculture.

Geo. H. Bertram, M.P., the talented member for Centre Toronto, was the next speaker, and on rising to address the audience was greeted with an ovation. Mr. Bertram is a large ship builder and is looked upon as a shrewd level headed business man. His forcible and able speech fully sustained his reputation as one of the best speakers in the Dominion Parliament. After voicing the pleasure it afforded him to be present to speak in the interest of a farmer, for he had been brought up on a farm himself, he turned to Ontario affairs. There were no great issues at stake in this campaign. The Opposition dealt in trivial, picayune details while the government appealed for support on their past record. The Reformers had been in power in Ontario over 25 years, and during that period not one single spot or stain can be found on the character or standing of one member of the government. They could not find a parallel case in the history of any Government in the world. He thought this "set above everything else o'ertopped everything else. He didn't care about little matters about piggeries, and school books. So long as he was satisfied that the Government was honest, and managing the larger issues of the province satisfactorily, he was satisfied. Of our educational system, it was sufficient to say that it had won the gold medal at the World's Fair at Chicago. Of the surplus, the opposition were using the self same arguments that they had used in the discussions of 22 years ago. He showed conclusively that the government had a surplus of over $5,000,000, and referred them to the joint discussion (a report of which could be found in the Globe) between Mr. Rowell and Mr. Marter on this subject. The Conservative champion had been made to bite the dust after all his vain boastings and cries of "show me a man." Marter, the Goliah met his David. In reference to this question he did not think it was good statesmanship to hoard up a surplus. He thought the Conservative party should give John Sandfield Macdonald a rest. John Sandfield was a Reformer and a hard-headed penurious Scotchman. Whatever virtues he possessed, the Conservatives are not entitled to any credit of it. They have no right to say if they were in power they would follow in his footsteps. Their record in the past gave the lie to any such claim. The Sandfield Macdonald surplus had been well spent. The government had returned it to the municipalities to whom it belonged and had paid out many millions besides to relieve the tax payers of the Province. This they had done, too, without taxing the people a single cent.

Mr. Bertram handled the timber question in an effective manner, and gave the Government high praise for the able manner in which they had disposed of this troublesome question. He referred how the able men of the opposition were retiring from the field as there was nothing in it for them. Dr. Ryerson and Mr. Howland had deserted Mr. Whitney. In the ranks of the opposition there were not enough qualified men to form a good cabinet. These men couldn't get above the level of small, petty things. The calf with the cough and the hog with the cholera were their only stock in trade. He had heard St. John discussing the piggery. The man worked like a windmill and he gave you the impression that the whole future of Canada, yea, and the British Empire was wrapped up in this great Piggery issue.

Mr. Bertram referred to what Mr. Whitney is pleased to term the Engledue deal, and believed as a business man that it was one of the best things the Government could have done. He also referred briefly to the succession duties and instanced the legislation passed by the Government for the amelioration of the toilers of the land In closing his excellent address Mr. Bertram urged upon the good men of the County of Lennox to rally round the farmer candidate.

THE SLOAN MEDICINE CO.

Dear Sirs—For years I was troubled with periodical sick headaches, being affected usually every Sunday, and used all the remedies that were advertised as cures, and was treated by almost every doctor in Guelph but without any relief. One doctor told me it was caused by a weak stomach, another said it was hereditary and incurable. I was induced by a neighbor to try Sloan's Indian Tonic, and am happy to say I did so. A few doses gave immediate relief, and one bottle and a half made a complete cure.

This was three years ago and the headaches have never returned. I was also troubled with asthma and nothing helped me like your Sloan's Indian Tonic. I can heartily recommend it to all and will be glad to give any particulars to any one afflicted as I was.

THE system of re-forestry which the Hardy Government has inaugurated will make the timber of the province last forever.

AFTER twenty-six years of Liberal rule in Ontario the Opposition cannot point to one corrupt act on the part of the Government.

An Opposition without a policy appealing to an intelligent electorate to turn out an honest, capable and well-tried Government because it has been in power twenty-six years is unique in the history of any country.

Corby's I. X. L. is playing a prominent part in the campaign in the Hastings. A gentleman who has just returned from a trip in that county avers that he saw more drunken men in Hastings in three days than he had seen in Lennox in one year.

BEFORE Honore Robillard would consent to become the Conservative candidate in Russell he had to be promised a cabinet position in the Ontario ministry in the event of the Whitney party being successful at the polls. It was Sir Charles Tupper that made the promise.

THE Liberals of the local Reform Association at Stella have appointed Mr. R. A. Caughey as their president. The choice, we understand, was unanimous, and a wise one. Mr. Caughey is a promising young man of more than ordinary ability, and promises well to be a public speaker of considerable merit. He holds the distinction of being a successful leader of young men, and we believe he will fill the position with credit to himself and satisfaction to the electors, as well as to Mr. Aylesworth, the Liberal candidate for this county. He has an able lieutenant to assist him in the person of Ex-Reeve Alex. McKee, who was elected vice-president.

OUR contemporary, The Beaver, excelled itself last week and this week we are confident it will out "St. John," "St. John." The salaries paid to the officials of the Ontario Government commanded its attention and it gave out that last year the officials of the Ontario Government were paid $1,731,290. To show the utter absurdity of this statement it is only necessary to point out that the total expenditure of the Province last year was $3,703,379.73. This included the grants to education, maintenance of public institutions, hospital and charities and agricultural grants. These alone with payments to counties to aid the administration of Justice amounted to about $2,500,000. The Beaver toys with millions as a boy plays with marbles.

WHEN the Conservatives held their memorable meeting in the Mail building, Toronto, last year the burden of their song was, "Capture the Provinces and the Dominion is ours." Sir Chas. Tupper was elected president of the association and James Pliny Whitney, vice-president. The great Tupper detailed the plan of Ontario's capture and the boys shouted right out in "meetin'" "It is good to be here." Tupper has been directing Mr. Whitney's campaign, and the Hon. Geo. Foster has been addressing meetings and writing boomerang articles for Whitney in the Ottawa Citizen. Henry Corby, M. P., of Belleville, whose name is writ large on whiskey bottles throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion, is wielding all his well-known and peculiar in-

Perfectly Cured

Weak and Low Spirited—Nervous Prostration—Appetite Poor and Could Not Rest.

"I take great pleasure in recommending Hood's Sarsaparilla to others. It has been the means of restoring my wife to good health. She was stricken down with an attack of nervous prostration. She suffered with headaches and her nerves were under severe strain. She became very low spirited and so weak she could only do a little work without resting. Her appetite was poor, and being so weak she could not get the proper rest at night. She decided to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, as we had heard it highly praised, and I am glad to state that Hood's Sarsaparilla has perfectly cured all her ailments." G. BELLAMY, 321 Hannah St., West, Hamilton, Ontario. Remember

A RETROGRADE MOVEMENT.

Dr. Meacham tried to make a little cheap capital for himself at his meeting here on the 14th inst. He said he had urged upon the Government the authorizing of a primary geography, and waxed eloquent over the relief this would afford the poor man. The solicitude of the politician for the welfare of the poor man on the eve of a general election is a thing of beauty and a joy forever. If the poor man will go back 15 years, to the year 1883 when the present Minister of Education, took charge, he will find that we had in the public schools at that time nine different text books in geography, eleven in grammar, four in arithmetic, five in history and three series of texts books in reading. In each of these subjects there is but one text book now in use. One of the great reforms of Mr. Ross' adminstration was the doing away with the multiplicity of text books. In Dr. Ryerson's time we had fifty-five text books in the public schools, now there are only eleven. As has been pointed out the policy of the department is to authorize but one text book in each subject, so that pupils in changing from one locality to another, may not be required to purchase new books. Dr. Meacham's educational policy is a reactionary one. He would take us back to the days when we had nine text books in in geography, and fifty-five in all.

COMPARISONS ARE ODIOUS.

Take the Pansy and Elsie series of books, which retail at 35c. each, and compare them with the public school Second Reader, which retails at 35c, and you will be convinced that the latter book is better bound and better printed.

Take "The Hermits," by C. Kingsley, which comprises 325 pages and retails for $1, and compare it with the public school fourth reader, which contains 350 pages and retails at 40 cents and you will find that the binding is identical and that the Fourth Reader is much better printed than "The Hermits."

The Third Reader sells for 35 cents and you will find on examination that it will compare more than favorably in workmanship with the novels which retail for 60 cents.

The first and second part readers which retail for 10 and 15 cents respectively are infinitely superior in binding and printing to the 15 and 20 cent paper covered novels which are to be found on the shelves of every bookseller.

It is all very well for Whitney,

NAPANEE, FRIDAY, FEB 25th 1898.

JIM REID and his colonization roads' resolution should be laid on the shelf. Both have outlived their usefulness.

ONTARIO has a system of public buildings inferior to none in America, not one cent of the cost of which was raised by direct taxation. They were paid for out of current revenue.—Ex.

IF you want Government without taxation vote for Hardy.

IT is easier to vote out a good government than to replace it.

IT is now within a few days of polling day and Mr. Whitney has not announced his policy.

IT will redound to the advantage of Lennox & Addington if supporters of the Government are returned on March 1st.

UNDER Liberal rule it costs much less to govern the Province of Ontario than the city of Toronto, costs its taxpayers.

WE believe that Mr. Whitney is the only member of the Ontario Legislature who is a director in an American lumber company.

BOWEN E. AYLSWORTH'S municipal experience warrants us in saying that he will make a more useful member than Dr. Meacham.

THE Ontario Government has managed the affairs of this banner Province for twenty years without taking one cent from the people.

MR. STRATTON, M.P.P., of Peterboro, says that Dr. Meacham lobbied for the James Bay Railroad. Mr. Meacham is endeavoring to convey the impression that he opposed the grant to this road.

THE Ontario Government does not ask the people to contribute one dollar toward the care of the insane. The municipalities of the Province of Quebec are forced to bear half the cost of the care of the insane, and in Nova Scotia the Government only pays one-fifth of the cost.

RESULTS of the Government's timber policy: The province receives a revenue of nearly a million dollars a year, a park of a million acres has been reserved for public use, a system of fire-ranging has been established, and, finally, all timber cut down in the future must be manufactured within the province.—Toronto Star.

ONTARIO has an auditos in the person of C. H. Sproule and he must be a more wide awake, careful and painstaking officer than the Auditor-General at Ottawa, for the very reason that the Opposition after twenty-six years of prying and spying have never succeeded in finding a figure out of place. Mr. Sproule's duties are similar to that of the Dominion Auditor-General.

THE Toronto Telegram, an Independant Conservative paper says: "Gentlemen who are urging Ontario to vote out the Hardy Government because the defeat of the Grits would have a good effect on the Conservative party, might stop and think that Ontario usually votes in accordance with its desire to produce a good effect on its own fortunes."

WHO is this man Whitney, anyway? We are told that he is a lawyer, but can anyone tell of an important brief that he has held? In Sir Oliver Mowat and Hon. Arthur Hardy we have men who are in the front rank in their profession and in the cases in which the interests the of Province and the Dominion clashed, thanks to their presentation of the case, Ontario has always been awarded the decision by the Supreme Court and the Privy Council.

Audence to bring the three Hastings into line. Corby doesn't disguise his reasons. "Carry Ontario and it will aid us in regaining the Dominion," says the head bottler of I. X. L. The boys are working hard for a return of the good old days when timber limits were parcelled out at $5 a square mile.

IT IS TIME FOR A CHANGE.

Lennox & Addington have been sending opponents of the government to Toronto for the past ten years.

Beyond drawing their sessional indemnity they have accomplished nothing.

Aylsworth and Wartman are able men who will have the ear of the Government.

Reid and Meacham have had a good innings and as they have not demonstrated their fitness for the positions they have held, why, let us have a change.

WHO DOES THE WORK?

The following statement gives the number of bills introduced during the recent Legislature by the members of the Ontario government and by the leading members of the Opposition respectively:

MEACHAM'S EQUIVOCAL COURSE.

Mr. Whitney says that his policy is the direct opposite to that of the Hardy Government. Dr. Meacham is sailing in the same boat. Now that Mr. Aylsworth has announced that he is opposed to the bonus system Dr Meacham's mouth-piece, The Beaver, comes out with a long article in favor of bonusing and lauds the doctor to the skies for his attitude on this question. Mr. Aylsworth is held up to execration for his independent stand on the bonus question, and everybody is urged to support Dr. Meacham because he is in favor of bonusing iron. Sometime ago a gentleman in town wrote to Dr. Meacham requesting him to state his position in reference to the "iron bonuses." Under date of Nov. 24th, 1897, the doctor replied as follows:

On the bonus question there is no need of any secrecy on my part and I thought I spoke plainly on the subject at the skating rink at our evening meeting when I declared my opposition to the Bonus System, excepting of course those for colonization purposes and I also called the attention of the meeting to the gratuity system which has cost the province some $284,000 since '76. The iron smelting bonus, as I understand it cannot be repealed for two years—and then I think both parties will drop it—at least I will not vote for its renewal. Believe me my dear sir.

Yours truly,
W. W, MEACHAM.

Dr. Meacham's stand on the bonus question at present is an equivocal one. While his organ announces that Mr. Meacham is a hard-and-fast supporter of "iron bonuses," the doctor occupies an elevated position on the fence and gracefully endeavors to balance himself so as to please both parties. Dr. Meacham should either repudiate his organ, or follow the example of his leader, Sir Charles Tupper, and acknowledge that he made a mistako at the skating rink meeting as he was not then aware of the independent stand Mr. Aylsworth would take on this question.

"From a child I suffered from biliousness and headache, and all the money I spent for medicine brought me no relief. Four bottles of B.B.B. cured me completely, however, and I gladly recommend it."

decry our Public School system and grow choleric over the school book extortion, or the "Ross Schoolbook Monopoly," but if any intelligent elector will institute comparisons on his own account he will learn just kow much dependance is to be placed in these cries.

ONTARIO'S LABOR LAWS.

As in agriculture the Liberal Government of Ontario has recognized the greatest industry of this country and,—by the establishment of the Department of Agriculture with a responsible Minister at its head in the person of Hon. John Dryden, a thorough, practical farmer possessing superior administrative ability,—has been able to wisely and economically assist those who are engaged in the various branches of farming, so its record as to labor legislation is regarded by competent authorites as the most advanced, and progressive of any self-governed country in the world.

That well-known Conservative, Mr. E. F. Clarke, M. P., and for years one of the most prominent of the Opposition members in the Provincial Legislature, speaking on this subject at Dundurn Park, Hamilton, last Labor Day, said:

"In looking up the history of the Province for twenty-five years, the people might well congratulate themselves on the strides that had been made. It was less than twenty-five years since Parliament declared labor organizations to be legal.

Before 1872 it was an illegal thing to be a member of such organizations, but no man need not now apologize for standing on the platform on behalf of organized labor. The objects of organization were peaceful and progressive and he was bound to give full credit to the Attorney General, Hon. A. S. Hardy, and Hon. J. M. Gibson, for the efforts they had made during many years on its behalf. They have also been willing to accede to any resonable demand of organized labor. As the combined effort of organized labor there had been placed upon the Statute books a body of legislation that is a credit to those who have enacted it and to those who have demanded it."

Spanish Peasants' Trick.

In one respect the Spanish peasants are ahead of the rest of the world—they have learned to make cocks hatch eggs and look after the chickens, while the hen, being at liberty, can and does lay more eggs than she would if hampered by her maternal duties. The trick is performed in this way: They carefully pluck the feathers off the rooster's underside, and the bare skin is then irritated with nettles until inflammation sets in. The cock soon finds that the pain caused by this cruel process is mitigated by warmth and softness, and this makes him willing and eager, although for purely selfish reasons, to hatch a brood and let the little chicks sit under him.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Over 1,000 series of Greek coins, issued by independent cities, are known to exist.

AWFUL HEART DISEASE.

Death Charmed away Under the Spell of Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart—More Wonderful Than a Fairy Tale is the Story of Mrs. Roadhouse, of Willscroft, Ont.

Where disease has affected the heart the remedy to be applied must be speedy in its effects, or all may be lost. Mrs. Roadhouse, of Willscroft, Ont. says: "Cold sweat would stand out in great beads upon my face, because of the intense suffering from heart disease. I often felt that the death struggle was at hand. No medicine gave me help until I used Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart. In thirty minutes the severe pain was removed, and after taking little more than one bottle the trouble had vanished. I know nothing of it to-day."

SALARIES OF PUBLIC SERVANTS.

Much ado is being made by the Opposition about alleged over payment of the public servants of the Province. A comparison between Ontario and and other countries shows how unfair is such criticism.

Cabinet Ministers: Victoria, $10,000; Sth. Australia, 15,000 West Australia, $5,000; Massachusetts, $5,000; Ontario, $4,000. Deputy Ministers: Victoria, $4,500; Sth. Australia $3,000; West Australia, $3,000; Massachusetts, $2,-500; Ontario, $2,300 to $2.800.

Sergeant-at-arms: Victoria, $3,000; Masssachusetts, $3,500; Ontario, $600. Librarian; Victoria, $3,000; Massachusetts, $3,000; Ontario, $1,800. Queen's Printer: Victoria, $3,500; South Australia, $2,5000: West Australia, $2,000; Ontario, $1,400. Clerk of the House: Victoria, $9,000; South Australia, $5,000; Ontario, $2,000. Attorney-General: West Australia, $2,-500; Massachusetts, $3,500; Ontario $2,400. Inspector of Asylums; Victoria, $5,000; Ontario, $2,000. Inspector of Jails: Victoria, $3,750; Ontario, $2,500. THE ISLAND OF APPLE TREES.

It lies among the outer seas,
O'er many a mile of water wan,
And seldom any living man
Across the clamorous waves has past
And found ere he for death was cast,
Avilion, isle of apple trees.

Atlantis was its name of old,
And many a drowning mariner
'Twixt life and death has sighted her
Gold apples growing on the verge.
Then, as he sank in stifling surge,
Cursed her and all her fruit of gold.

And now upon the boughs one sees
No golden fruit, but only red,
Sweet apples moving overhead
In a soft wind that speaks of May.
And still one sees and sails away
From that dim isle of apple trees.

BEES LIKED HIS ODOR.

How a Farmer Unwillingly Bought a New Pair of Shoes For a Tramp.

As I sat on the veranda with the farmer after supper I asked him if he was not greatly bothered with tramps, and his reply was:

"Waal, a good many of 'em come along and want a bite to eat, and some of 'em are pretty sassy, but only one man of 'em ever served me a real mean trick."

"Police, your dog?" I queried.

"It was meaner than that. We was eatin dinner one day in the spring when a hive of bees started to swarm. I'd bin expectin it and watchin 'em and had a new hive ready. When bees swarm, they will light on most anything handy—a limb, a bush or even the pump. Jest as the bees began to pour out of the hive and circle around along comes a tramp up the path to ask for somethin to eat. The queen bee settled down on his old hat, and the hull swarm followed her. In two minits that tramp's head and shoulders was covered with bees, and I yells to him for heaven's sake not to try to fight 'em off or he'd be stung to death."

"He must have been terror stricken," I said.

"Not a bit of it, sir. He was as cool as a cowcumber, and when I told him he'd hev to stand in a smudge till the bees was killed off he jest laughed. When they'd all settled down on him and I was goin to start a smudge, he sez:

"'Old man, what d'ye consider this swarm of bees wuth in cold cash?'

"'About $5,' sez I.

"'Are ye willin to give $3?' sez he.

"'What fur?' sez I.

"'Bekase ye'll either pay me $3 or I'll walk off with the bizness and sell out to somebody else!'"

"And you had to buy him off?" I asked.

"That's where the meanness comes in," replied the farmer. "Them bees was my property, and I wasn't buyin what was my own. He offered to take $2, but I couldn't see how he could git away with 'em and refused to come down. Then he False Representations.

An Ontario Lady Compels a Merchant to Pay for Damages.

A lady writing from an Ontario town says: "A month ago I visited one of our town stores and asked for three packages of Diamond Dye Navy Blue for dyeing all wool goods The merchant informed me that he was out of Navy Blue in the Diamond Dyes, and talked me into buying a dye of another make, at the same time guaranteeing them to do as good work as I could get from the Diamond. A lady friend was with me at the time and heard the whole conversation. I took the strange dye home, used them according to directions, and was sadly disappointed with the results. The color was anything but a Navy; in truth, my materials were spoiled. I at once took the goods to the merchant and told him his dyes were frauds. He offered to give me more of the same dyes or my money back. I refused both offers, and after I had threatened law proceedings he thought it best to pay for the materials spoiled. This merchant will never again have the chance to sell me any more dyes. I shall go where I can get the Diamond Dyes at any time they are wanted. I have had my last lesson with poor dyes."

The Buck Saw.

"The buck saw in any mind," said the middle aged man, "is indelibly associated with a saw buck—the reach between the two X's half sawed through, where it had been scored by the saw dropping down upon it—standing by a wood pile in the back yard. There are chips scattered around on the ground and scraps of bark and more or less sawdust.

"What brings all this to my mind is the sight of a man sawing wood with a buck saw on the deck of a schooner lying at a South street wharf, a stick of cord wood resting in the saw buck, and the man with his knee on it and sawing away just as he would ashore. At first this looked strange, and so it does still to some extent. I had seen saw bucks and buck saws on the decks of canalboats, where they looked natural enough, because the canalboat is usually close by the land, where one could step to or from it easily, but I could scarcely make the buck saw seem familiar on a salt water craft, because it seemed to me so essentially a thing of the land.

"Finally I did make it seem all right on the schooner, though, by thinking of that as a vessel making short voyages and keeping near land and hauling up maybe in creeks close by the shore and as being in various ways intimately associated with the land, but I couldn't think of it as being used at sea. But when I came to think it over I knew, of course, they must have some way of sawing wood aboard deep water ships, and when I came to inquire I learned that the buck saw is used afloat just as it is ashore; it is plied on a ship a thousand miles at sea just as it would be on a farm."—New York Sun.

ALMOST UNBEARABLE.

"I suffered from kidney trouble so much that the pain in my back was almost unbearable and I felt tired and worn out all the time, my tongue was coated and until I took Doan's Kidney Pills I had been unable to do my housework for over a month. These pills have made a complete cure, all my kidney and bladder troubles have disappeared and I feel like a new "And he wasn't stung?"

"Not once, sir. The bees seemed to like the smell of him, and he paddled along the road as grand as you please."—Washington Times.

Rich and Poor.

It is said that John Jacob Astor once replied to an inquisitive man who asked him how much money he had, "Just enough, sir, so that I can eat one dinner a day!" How much wealth would a man need to enable him to eat two? If we are sometimes tempted to envy the very wealthy, let us reflect that in all essential particulars we are quite as well off as they. The colors that dye the sky at sunset or paint the leaves of the forest in autumn are no lovelier to them than to us; sleep is as sweet and restful and activity as joyous to us as to them. If we miss certain advantages, so also we escape the cares and satiety of wealth—"a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth."—Christian Work.

WELLS & RICHARDSON CO.,

DEAR SIRS:—For several years I have had weak nerves, and was gradually running down, and last March I was prostrated with nervous debility. My sufferings were excruciating in the extreme; I really thought there never was another who suffered quite so much with mental depression and weak nerves. This lasted about three months, and I was taking doctor's medicine continually, but was getting worse instead of better.

One day, while feeling quite discouraged and wondering if I was ever to get out of my dreadful state, a dear friend said to me, "I wish you would try Paine's Celery Compound." As I had intended to try it I acted upon her advice and started using it the very same day, and from the first dose I felt new hope and new life coming. I continued using it, and and am still taking it once in a while, always asking God's blessing on each bottle. I am very much improved, and cannot say too much in favor of the medicine, and would recommend it to all suffering from nervous prostration and mental depression.

Yours faithfully,

L. E. PARR, Crystal City, Man.

The Better Way.

There are some men who believe that honesty in everyday business matters is incompatible with success. They think that in order to get along they must practice a certain degree of trickery and deception. They argue that the up and down honest man who will not swerve from the path of rectitude is sure to fail in whatever he undertakes, and hence they justify themselves in practicing petty as well as wholesale fraud and in taking advantage of the verdancy of customers under the plea that custom and necessity compel them to adopt this course. The man who possesses the requisite business qualifications can succeed better by pursuing an honest, straightforward course than if he were to deaden his conscience and disregard all moral obligations. We frequently hear the expression made in reference to some good natured, inactive man, "Oh, he's too honest to get along!" Now, this is a false inference, for in nine cases out of ten the honest man's failure does not arise from the practice of an upright course, but from his unfitness for the business in which he is engaged.

We do not by any means intend to convey the impression that honesty will cause a man who is not qualified for the business in which he engages to succeed. What we mean to assert and the impression that we would leave on the minds of the readers of The Ledger is that a man who is adapted to a certain pursuit will and must necessarily succeed better by dealing honestly and uprightly than by cheating and defrauding.

But in addition to the matter of success, how cheerful and pleasant is the condition of the man who knows and feels that he is doing an honest business—a business which his conscience approves!—New York Ledger.

Ice More Slippery Than Glass.

Ice has the property—peculiar to bodies which expand on freezing—of liquefying under pressure and solidifying again when the pressure has been removed. Consequently the weight of any body moving upon a sheet of ice causes the formation of a thin layer of water, which separates it from the ice, and thus, by reducing the friction to a minimum, enables it to move smoothly over the surface—i. e., makes the ice more "slippery." On glass, on the contrary, this liquid medium is wanting, so that the two solid and unyielding bodies come into actual physical contact, causing a friction which, in spite of the smoothness of the glass, considerably retards the motion of the body. If two smooth sheets of glass be taken and a few drops of water sprinkled over the one and the other placed above it, a thin layer of water will be formed, and until this layer has been pressed out the upper glass will move on the other as smoothly as if on ice. This peculiar property of ice is due to the effect of pressure in lowering the freezing point of water, so that whenever ice is subjected to great pressure it partially melts.—Exchange.

Stories of Henry George.

The activity and power of intellect of the late Henry George did not prevent absentmindedness. A writer in The Review of Reviews says that this quality was "the jest of his circle."

Names escaped him. I heard him say to Mr. Dayton, the candidate on his ticket for comptroller and one of the best known men in New York:

"You won't mind it, I hope, if I forget your name. I am so conscious of the danger of getting names wrong that when the need of remembering comes it rattles me, and away the name goes."

He came late to a dinner at the Lotus club, where he was to discuss with some friends the question of his being a candidate in apprehended contingencies. It was raining, and he took from his pocket the slippers with which Mrs. George had insisted on providing him in case he should get his feet wet, and as he put them on he apologized with honest gravity:

"I lost time looking for a man I kept asking after as Kinsella, and it turned out his right name was Mc[illegible]riarity. At least I think that was what he told me it was when I found him."

But there was no absentmindedness when discussion of the business in hand ensued; he was as keen and wide awake.

A SUCCESSFUL EVANGELIST.

Rev. W. A. Dunnett, a Man Whose Good Work Is Widely Known.

He Relates Events in His Career of General Interest—For Years He Suffered from Heart Trouble, and Frequently from Collapse—On One Occasion Five Doctors Were in Attendance—He Is Now Freed from His Old Enemy, and Enjoys the Blessing of Good Health.

REV. W. A. DUNNETT.

From the Smith's Falls Record.

Throughout Canada, from the western boundary of Ontario to the Atlantic Ocean, there is no name more widely known in temperance and evangelistic work than that of the Rev. W. A. Dunnett. Mr. Dunnett has been the Grand Vice-Councillor of Ontario and Quebec in the Royal Templars, and so popular is he among the members of the order that in Montreal there is a Royal Templars council named "Dunnett Council" in his honor. For more than ten years Mr. Dunnett has been going from place to place pursuing his good work, sometimes assisting resident ministers, sometimes conducting a series of gospel temperance meetings independently, but always laboring for the good of his fellows. While in Smith's Falls a few months ago in connection with his work he dropped into the Record office for a little visit with the editor. During the conversation the Record ventured to remark that his duties entailed an enormous amount

N.H., five doctors had arrived and were in attendance before he regained consciousness. In all these cities and towns the newspapers freely mentioned his affliction at the time. Mr. Dunnett said he had consulted many physicians though he said, to be entirely fair, he had never been any great length of time under treatment by any one doctor because of his itinerant mode of life. In the early part of the summer of 1896, while in Brockville assisting the pastor of the Wall street Methodist church in evangelistic services, he was speaking of his trouble to a friend who urged him to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and next day presented him with a dozen boxes. "I took the pills" said Mr. Dunnett, "and I declare to you I am a well man to-day. I used to worry a great deal over the pain about my heart, but that is all done now, and I feel like a new man." All this the reverend gentleman told in a simple conversational way, and when it was suggested that

PAIN IN THE HEART.

Too serious a condition to neglect.

A Guelph harness maker tells how he was cured.

Mr. Wm. Dyson, the well known saddler and harness maker of Guelph, Ont., makes the following statement: "I heartily recommend Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills to anyone suffering from nervousness and heart trouble. They are a splendid medicine for such complaints. For a long time I was afflicted with nervousness and pain in my heart, which was especially severe at night, often destroying my rest. These pills cured me and invigorated my nervous system which is now strong and healthy. They restored restful sleep besides removing the distressing heart pains which formerly gave me so much anxiety and trouble."

presently, Mrs. Fontenoy pointed from the window and said :—

"Yonder is Live Oaks."

Irma saw a stately old house of mellow brick with gray stone facings. Three or four magnificent live oaks stood guard about it, and a wide drive led up to the gate.

Lights flashed from the windows, and there was a sound of gay voices and room, but it is pretty and cool, and has a nice view of the river."

As they passed the parlor on their way upstairs, a young, handsome man turned and caught a glimpse of Irma.

"It is Madcap's new music-teacher, I suppose," he said to the stately, Juno-shaped blonde who was crocheting at his side. "She has a very singular face. I fancy it would be beautiful in certain lights."

"I hope she has some flesh," returned Belle, calmly knitting on. "If she hasn't, Maddalon will wear her into a whipping-post as she did Miss Midgens.'"

"Nonsense! Miss Midgens' own temper wore her into skin and bone. Miss Midgens was an acid old maid, and this girl is—"

"This girl is better flirting material, eh, Cousin Bert?" said Miss Gray, wheeling round on the piano stool.

Dr. John's face clouded a little. He had been telling his fiancee of a case of pathetic distress brought under his eyes by his profession. He thought she was interested in it, and she had not been listening. But he was used to Fannie's moods.

CHAPTER IV.

"I hope you will feel at home, Aimee," Mrs. Fontenoy said, smiling kindly, as she closed the door.

Irma was left alone. She sunk on a chair in the midst of the pretty room, with its pale-tinted walls, strewn with mountain pinks, matched by the carpet and toilet-set.

For a minute she sat there, her face buried in her hands. She was dazed at the sudden change in her life—in her identity. Her ideas upon moral matters were vague. She did not realize the wrong of the deception she had entered upon as another more strictly brought up might have done. But her instinct of honor made it give her a twinge of pain, while the love of excitement inherent in her was stirred by the novel sensation of being other than herself.

She lifted her head.

"No longer Irma Weir, henceforth I am Aimee Brazeale," she said.

The dressing-case mirror was before her. She saw her face, her flushed cheeks, her shining eyes. Hair and eyes were dark like Aimee Brazeale's, but the expression was wholly different. There was more strength for good or evil—more of the latent fire of passion in this face.

Suddenly a face appeared behind her in the mirror. She started, and turned slowly round, with white lips and dilated eyes. It was only the maid, who had brought her tea.

"Did I scare you?" she said. "I knocked and you didn't answer, and I of hard work. To this Mr. Dunnett assented, but added that in his present physical condition he was equal to any amount of hard work. But it was not always so, he said, and then he gave the writer the following little personal history, with permission to make it public. He said that for the past thirteen years he had been greatly troubled with a pain in the region of his heart, from which he was unable to get any relief. At times it was a dull, heavy pain, at others sharp and severe. Oftentimes it rendered him unfit for his engagements, and at all times it made it difficult to move. His trouble was always visible to the public, and frequently when conducting service he would give out and doctors had to be called in to attend him. This occurred to him in the Young street church, Toronto; the Baptist church, Woodstock, N.B.; the Methodist church, Carleton Place, Ont. On another occasion while preaching to an audience of 2,500 people in the Franklin Street Congregational church, at Manchester he let it be known, his father demurred, because, as he put it: "I am almost afraid to say I am cured, and yet there is no man enjoying better health to-day than I do."

At that time, at Mr. Dunnett's request, his statement was only published locally, but now writing under the date of Jan. 21st, from Fitchburg, Mass, where he has been conducting a very successful series of evangelistic meetings, he says:—"I had held back from writing in regard to my health, not because I had forgotten, but because it seemed too good to be true that the old time pain had gone. I cannot say whether it will ever return, but I can certainly say it has not troubled me for months, and I am in better health than I have been for years. I have gained in flesh, hence in weight. I would prefer not to say anything about my appetite; like the poor, it is ever with me. Yes; I attribute my good health to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and you have my consent to use the fact.

CHAPTER III.

The Monsoon got on her way a little after midnight. But she made slow progress. She encountered another sand bar and had another tiresome stoppage. She did not reach Illysandra until the sun was setting. Irma and her luggage—her valise and Aimee's little trunk—were put on the wharf, while the deck-hands were taking in wood. She stood looking drearily after the receding boat, hardly hearing the importunities of two colored hotel drummers, who were repeatedly informing her that the house each represented was "de only first-class hotel in de city. Ev'body tell you so."

They were ready to fight over her valise, when she turned and put herself in charge of one of them. In a few minutes she was seated in a pretty little room of the River House. A servant brought a pencil and a piece of paper, saying:—

"Your name, please, miss, for the clerk to register."

But before the name could be written there was an announcement:—

"A lady to see you, miss."

"A lady to see me?"

"Yes, miss, it is Mrs. Colonel Fontenoy. She asked if Miss Aimee Brazeale had come, and the clerk told her yes; he had seen your name on your trunk. Here's she now."

"May I come in?" asked a musical voice. A sweet, delicate, sallow little face peered in, and then a little figure in black tripped into the room and ran up to Irma and kissed her warmly.

"I am so glad to see you, my dear," she said. "We looked for you yesterday morning; the Monsoon was due then. But the river is so low, and the weather is so hot—isn't it? But you will find Live Oaks a cool place—'a boundless contiguity of shade,' as the poet says. My dear, you are not at all like your mother. You have your father's eyes and brow; yes, and his mouth too. Your mother was blonde and petite, with such a sea-shell color! we called her Pinkie at school. Oh, how pale you are looking! You must be tired to death travelling on that miserable little boat; crowded, too, I dare say. We will take you home at once and let you have a good rest. I will order the boy to take your trunk to the carriage, and we will drive right home. Maddie is crazy to see her new friend."

Not for Irma. She had talked without stopping or giving Irma a chance to explain that she was not the expected Aimee, the schoolmate's daughter ready to be welcomed with open arms at Cool Live Oaks. Oh! if she only were Aimee! Why could she not be? What was to prevent her being Aimee? Who would know? Who would undeceive these people? And where would be the harm? She could fill the post that Aimee was to have had. She knew music and French. She knew very little of anything else; but she was well instructed in these. Her mother had been educated by French nuns, and spoke French with the ease of a native. They had conversed in it together ever since Irma could remember. And music, her mother's passion, her consolation—she had taught it to Irma almost from her cradle.

"Yes, I can take Aimee's place," was the thought that went swiftly through the girl's mind. "They would not give it to me if they knew that I was a stranger, with no recommendation, no friends. They would inquire into my life; they would turn from me if they knew. And it was not my fault—oh, it was not my fault. How kind and pleasant Mrs. Fontenoy was! How good it must be to live with people who are kind and refined. Oh! must I tell her?"

Before she had decided Mrs. Fontenoy had returned.

"Now, my dear Aimee, we will go," she said; "your trunk and valise are in the carriage. There are your veil and gloves, dear, don't leave them. A nice supper and some good tea and a sound sleep in a comfortable bed will put some roses in these cheeks."

She tucked Irma's hand under her arm, and led her down to the carriage that was in waiting.

As in a dream, Irma was whirled through the streets—out past the heart of the town to the suburban villas that lay around it—pretty, ornate cottages set in handsome grounds—until, music.

"Have you a party?" Irma asked.

"No, it is only our home crowd. I think. My step-son, Doctor John Fontenoy, is here. He lives nearer town in his pretty bachelor home. His betrothed, Miss Fannie Gray, came yesterday. She has been at Saratoga this summer. She is a cousin of Colonel Fontenoy, and quite an heiress, by the way. That is she singing, and John is standing at the piano by her. You can see them through the window. Can you see Bertrand, my son, a little further back? He is talking to Belle, my step-daughter, who is called the finest looking woman in the state. John is the best fellow living, but he isn't as handsome as Bert. Ah! here comes your pupil, Maddie—Madcap, her father calls her. She has heard the carriage."

A fresh-faced girl in a white frock, with smiling, bright eyes and short hair flying, came running down the steps to meet them.

"Maddie, honey, this is Miss Aimee."

"Let me look at her," the girl said, drawing Irma into the stream of light and looking at her with wide-open eyes. "I think—yes, I think I shall like her. I don't think I shall be tempted to play any tricks on her."

"I hope not, Madcap," her mother said, deprecatingly. "Aimee, dear, my girl has a good heart, but the very imp of mischief possesses her sometimes. You'll have to forbear—"

"Now, mother, don't be putting up any warning signboards against me. The truth is, Miss Aimee, I haven't had a teacher I could care a rotten hickory nut for. Your predecessor, Miss Midgens, told folks I was awful. 'Cause why, I couldn't help showing her I saw through her. Why, she was forty, and she wore babywaist dresses and short sleeves (with her skinny little arms), and she giggled and told fibs, and because my brother Bert wouldn't succumb to her charms she took her spite on me."

"Oh, Maddie!"

"Well, mother, I only want to sort of put myself in a right light to Miss Aimee beforehand. I know Belle is sure to give her a full list of my transgressions, and I want her to know why I couldn't respect Miss Midgens. If I hadn't caught her fibbing, though, and — But we'll let her pass. Miss Aimee, I'm not so bad. Ask my tutor, Mr Anderson, and he wouldn't tell a fib any more than George Washington. This is my dog, Gitup. He ain't a beauty, but handsome is as handsome does. This is my cat Napoleon—Nap for short. Ain't he a monster? fifteen pounds without his tail. Mark, my cousin, cut it off to that stub. Mark is your pupil, too. They'll tell you he's so good, but you look out. He was just to cut off a leetle bit of Nap's tail because he had fits, and Marm Delphy said that was good for fits, but what must he do but whack off the whole caudal appendage—the mean thing. And make out the hatchet slipped. Won't you go in the parlor, Miss Aimee? There's nobody there but home folks. And John is there—my brother, Doctor John—the best fellow—"

"No, Mad," her mother said, as Irma shrunk back from that lighted room full of gay voices, and bright dresses, and fair faces. "Aimee will go to her room and have her tea there. She will come down after awhile if she feels like it; but I dare say she had rather rest. Aimee, I have given you a little came in."

The tea was hot and nice: the crisp biscuit, the plum preserves and sliced tongue, made a perfect little refreshment. Irma ate with relish. On the tray lay a bouquet of violets.

"Maddie sent them," said the little maid, "and she says may she come up presently and see you?"

"Tell her yes," Irma said. She had no wish to be alone with her thoughts that night.

She had just sent away the tray when Maddie came. She had a spray of freshly cut tea-roses.

"For you to wear to-night," she said; "you are to appear in the drawing-room by command of her highness, Isabel Fontenoy, ruler supreme at Live Oaks. They are needing you in there badly right now."

"I do not think they are," Irma answered. "It did not look as though there was any need of a black shadow like me in that pretty lighted room as I passed."

"But it is dull there as a church. Cousin Fannie is in the dumps because there is nobody to flirt with; John, poor fellow, is trying to amuse her, but she is engaged to John, you know, and there is no fun in being sweet for him. Belle is smiling on her rich beau, Judge Howard, and making poor Mr. Warren—our teacher, who worships her—supremely miserable. Mr. Warren is enough sight more of a man than the old judge. He wears a scratch, and once, when I trod on his corns, he punched my head, and said something not in the prayer-book. Then he gave me a doll to smooth matters over. A doll! when I never did care for the sawdust things in my doll-days. He's a nice sort of man, I reckon, but he's as pompous as a turkey-cobbler. You ought to see 'Buddie' take him off."

"Your brother John?"

"Goodness, no. John Wouldn't make fun of a mule. He never hurt anybody's feelings in his life. It was Bert I meant. He is full of mischief, but the girls all like him, though; and the children and niggers and old maids and widows like John."

"And Miss Fannie Gray likes him"

"She ought to. Do you know what he did for her? She is a rich heiress now, but a few years ago she was poor and miserable and sickly—nearly dead with malaria. Her mother was my father's second cousin. She wrote to him after her husband died, and said they were starving; that she was bedridden, and the little girl a hopeless invalid. My father was about to send her some money, when John read the letter, and said he would go and attend to it himself. He went and found them in a low, half-overflowed part of New Orleans. He attended the mother until she died, and then he brought Fannie away with him. Such a puny, scrawny, little cross-eyed mite as she was, they say. She was twelve years old, and she didn't look nine. He took her to his home—he has a lovely old Gothic cottage on the edge of the town, and doctored her there, and cut her eyes till they ain't a bit crossed, they are the prettiest thing about her. He gave her a pony and made her ride every day. He taught her himself, until she knew enough to be sent off to school. Then he wrote to her father's sister about her—a rich, queer old maid. He took Fannie to see her one vacation. The old lady was pleased, and she has adopted Fanny, and made her will, and given her ever so much money. But while she was poor, John loved her, and she had promised to marry him. But I can't help thinking—'"

"What?"

"Nothing. Belle says I think a great deal more than I have any business to, and talk more than I think. But there's the clock striking eight, and you haven't said you'd go down and brighten up things, Ma'm'selle Aimee.

"'And this, with her sweet singing,
The Lorlei will do.'"

"How do you know I sing at all?"

"Oh, by that swell in your neck when you talk, and your voice is rich and throaty. But you must change your dress. I remember Belle's command was, 'Tell Miss Brazeale, please, to change her dress and come down among us.' I want to see you with your hair dressed, and these roses at your throat. Won't you let me fix you? I am really good at fixing folks, though Belle says I never was decent in my life. Can I help you take out your dresses?"

"They are not many to trouble over," Irma said. She felt reluctant to lift the lid of that little trunk and handle the neatly arranged clothes inside. She was willing to leave the task to Maddie.

"This black lawn with all the delicate little ruffles will be nice for you to wear to-night. There is such lovely lace at the throat and wrists, and it looks perfectly fresh. Have you ever worn it?"

"No," Irma said, coloring, and feeling deeply averse to wearing Aimee Brazeale's pretty dress. But had she not clothed herself in the dead girl's name and identity?

more sumptuous picture; a regal woman with a complexion of snow and roses, whose fingers were busy netting some cloud-like fabric. Occasionally she smiled in a half-condescending way, and murmured a response to the pompous-looking man who was exerting himself to interest her. "This," thought Irma, "must be 'her Highness,' as Maddie calls her, Miss Belle Fontenoy, of whom her step-mother says: 'She is called the handsomest woman in the state.'"

Her Highness came across the room at a sign from Mrs. Fontenoy, and was presented to Irma. She gave the new governess a little cool touch of the hand, said a few pleasant words as she looked down at her, and glided back to her seat by Judge Howard. She had overawed Irma. The girl's lonely, independent life among high ideals gleaned from books had given her a pride of her own.

An intent look made Irma turn her head and meet a pair of keen blue eyes that were studying her profile. Bert Fontenoy was standing behind the piano, turning music for a showy girl, with a bouquet of striped lilies on the bosom of her pink dress.

"It is Florence Bellamy," said Maddie, in a loud whisper. "She lives near us, and comes over with her little brother, and Bert takes her home. She is Bert's latest and most serious flirtee."

He heard her, and frowned, but the next instant he smiled, with a gleam of white teeth under his brown moustache. He left the piano and came over to the corner where Irma sat with Maddie and Mrs. Fontenoy; Dr. John having been summoned to the side of Miss Gray by an imperative beckon of her little hand.

"Madcap, you are too bad," Bert said, leaning on the back of his sister's chair, and pulling her plaits until she jumped. "You have been giving me a dreadful character, I feel sure. After it, I feel ashamed to ask Miss Brazeale's acquaintance."

Irma looked up at the laughing eyes, and brightened more than she had done any time this evening. He was so joyous-looking! She felt drawn to him, as a plant which has grown in a cellar is drawn by a gleam of sun. As for him, he had just said to Florence Bellamy:

"I never saw so strange a face as that girl's! Such shy, proud eyes like a young deer!"

"What a nice time you will have flirting with her!" Florence said, with a laughing sneer.

But Bert Fontenoy looked grave.

"I shall not flirt with her at all," he said. "She is not a woman to invite flirtation. Most women expect you to amuse them, and they seem to find no amusement so spicy as being made get herself. But Miss Bellamy was watching them while she played, and there was a vexed curl on her full lips.

Bert begged Irma to play.

"Or sing rather," he said, "we have been hungering for a song to-night. Miss Gray would only trill little fragments of songs—she has not unpacked her music. Will you come?"

He held out his hand to her and looked at her with persuasive eyes. She let him lead her to the piano. But what should she sing? How did he know she could sing? Besides her mother, the negroes and a few ignorant cattle-hunters had been her only audience. These had listened, open-mouthed, while she sang. She knew she loved to sing. She knew there were songs that thrilled her own soul when she sang them. She had learned them from her mother. They might be old and hackneyed; she did not know. How could she venture to sing them here before these people? But everything seemed strange and unreal now. She seemed herself a bubble on the tide of fate.

She sat down and sang a little song that had been wont to move her ignorant audience on the bayou. Even Vanhorn's earthly nature had been stirred by it.

A little song of yearning, love and passionate regret.

Her voice faltered at first, but it had the quality that holds attention and reaches the heart. It was a contralto of great purity and magnetism.

As she sang the last note she raised her eyes and met John Fontenoy's look. It was full of deep interest, of subtle appreciation of the music and the feeling of the song. But it was Bert's whispered praise as he bent over her that brought a flush to her cheek.

"Will Miss Brazeale please play something that will give us an idea of her method?"

It was Col. Fontenoy's formal voice. She looked up and saw his gaunt, spare form, his cold, grey eyes and prim, iron-grey side whiskers. She inwardly trembled on meeting that scrutinizing look. She half murmured a request to be excused, but, as she did so, Miss Gray's sweet voice, with its vibrating chord of sarcasm, reached her ear:

"Now, Madcap, you can hear what depths you are expected to explore. Miss Midgens will be nowhere."

"I am expected to show my capability and prove I am worthy of my hire," thought Irma, and her hesitation disappeared, her mouth took a proud curve, and turning to the pile of music before her she selected a difficult test piece and played it through with brilliance.

But her thoughts were not upon what she was doing. The black notes on the music sheet danced weirdly before her. The play of the white keys brought a rush of images and emotions—the pale mother who had taught her to play, her bayou life, her marriage, her murderous act, her flight, the dying Aimee—all came up as her fingers mechanically wrought out the music before her. She finished the last bar—a fine climax of harmony. She rose, white as the flowers on her breast, and bent her head—a slight haughty movement—murmured "Good-night," and abruptly left the room.

Bert looked after her bewildered.

"Have I, has any of us offended her?" he said.

"The new music-ma'am puts on airs," Miss Gray said with a toss of her fan of pink curlew feathers.

"She is nervous, coming among strangers, poor girl. We ought not to have asked her to play to-night," said John Fontenoy. "Playing is her business, I admit; but it is not her business to play at every idle demand."

"She holds herself rather proudly for a governess," said Florence Bellamy.

"Aimee Brazeale has a right to be proud," retorted Mrs. Fontenoy with some asperity. "She is as good as any of us. The best blood of the South is in her veins, and she has been well brought up."

"Her manners are quite unformed," said Belle, threading her needle with blue zephyr.

"Y-e-s," Mrs. Fontenoy admitted. "She is not like her mother. Poor Aimee Roubien was the gentlest and most lady-like girl I ever knew."

"But did she not take a crazy spell once in her life, and do a very wild thing? I have heard—" Mrs. Fontenoy gave the heiress a look of sharp rebuke.

"It was a temporary brain trouble, due to disease," she said.

"I hope nobody will allude to it before this girl," said Dr. John.

"No, for she might take it into her head to imitate the maternal example. She has a strange look in her eyes anyhow, and I shouldn't wonder—"

She broke off her sentence as she met John's deprecating look. She answered it with her defiant, laughing, spoiled-like glance.

"She has a strange look in her eyes," said Bert, "but it is a beautiful look—power to be most womanliness, both physical and mental. This does not mean perfection of outline nor regularity of features. It does not mean wit, nor talents nor accomplishments. It means that physical attractiveness that comes from perfect bodily condition and the bright, happy cheerfulness of disposition which only complete health can insure.

A woman with a bright eye, clear complexion, mantling color in the cheeks and buoyant elastic step and manner has a natural attractiveness that no artificial agency can counterfeit.

A woman who is afflicted with the mortifying misfortune of a dull, sallow, pimply complexion or that listless movement and attitude which provokes only disgust and revulsion in the opposite sex, ought to avail herself of the purifying, invigorating power of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which makes a strong, healthy stomach and digestive organism; purifies the blood and imparts a natural stimulus to the excretory functions; insures healthy weight, clear skin, bright eyes and the animated manner and bearing of perfect health.

A lady living in West Virginia, Miss Anna Callow, of Kyger, Roane Co., writes: "It is with pleasure I write you after using a few bottles of Dr. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and I think them valuable medicines for female troubles and weaknesses. I could hardly go about my work I had such inward weakness and constant misery in the womb. It worried me so that I would give out in walking a short distance. I had a bad cough and my lungs hurt me all the time. I got very thin, my complexion was bad, and my eyes would get so heavy in the evening they seemed stiff in the lids. I could hardly move them. Many persons were alarmed about me. I looked so bad and had such a cough; they were afraid I would go into consumption. I felt so badly every day that I had no life about me. I used only five bottles in all. I shall ever speak in praise of your grand medicines. They are blessings to suffering females."

Another good thing to have in the house is a vial of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They cure biliousness and constipation and never gripe.

The investigations which have been made justify the statement that each infectious disease is due to a specific—i. e., distinct—micro organism. There are, however, certain infectious diseases which physicians formerly supposed to be distinct, and to which specific names are given which are now known to be due to one and the same infectious agent or germ. Thus puerperal fever and erysipelas are now recognized as being caused by the same germ, the germ which is the usual cause of pneumonia is also the cause of a considerable proportion of the cases of cerebro spinal meningitis, etc.—Surgeon General George M. Sternberg in Appletons' Popular Science Monthly.

THE GENTLE THACKERAY.

It Was a Sad Christmas Eve When His Bright Light Went Out.

"I have known Thackeray 18 years, and I don't know him yet," said Douglas Jerrold. There was a reserve in the manner of the great satirist and humorist which prevented his friends from being near to him, and yet when the humor suited him he would open his heart as though he had never known the feeling of reticence. He cared little for display and adulation, and when a banquet was tendered him on his departure for America he said he wished it were over, as such things always set him trembling.

"Besides," said he, "I'll have to make a speech, and what am I to say? I'll see if I can hammer out something. I am afraid it will be stammering by and by."

At the time "Vanity Fair" was published, Charles Dickens was producing in monthly form the story of "Dombey and Son." Thackeray read with eager delight each number as it came from the press. Where Dickens described the death of little Paul with a depth of pathos which produced a vibratory emotion in the hearts of all who read it, Thackeray seemed electrified at the thought that there was a man living who could exercise so complete a control over him. Putting the copy of "Dombey and Son" in his pocket, he hurried down to Mr. Punch's office and, dashing it down on the table with startling vehemence, exclaimed: "There's no writing against such power as this—one has no chance. Read that chapter describing Paul's death. It is stupendous!"

Thackeray was found dead in bed on the eve of Christmas, 1863. He had laid his "weary pen" aside and sunk into his last deep sleep after months and years of not clothed herself in the dead girl's name and identity?

The dress fitted her wonderfully well. When she had fastened the roses below Irma's throat with a little pearl pin she had found in the trunk, Maddie said to her:

"Now look in the glass and see what you think of yourself."

"I would rather have you," Irma said.

Maddie stood back, and surveyed her with intent eyes.

"You look like nobody I ever saw. Bert will like your looks, but Belle won't. She likes people cut out by a pattern of her own. Shall we go down?"

Irma was trembling. To go down among them all, and be introduced as the girl she had seen coffined only last night—to be received with kindness due to Aimee Brazeale—it was a trying ordeal. But she must pass through it some time, as well to-night as to-morrow. But when she stood in the door with the light pouring over her slender figure, and all eyes upon her, her head swam dizzily. Mrs. Fontenoy came to her side, and took her hand.

"This, my dears, is the new member of our household, Aimee Brazeale, the daughter of my dearest friend."

On hearing that name, and feeling, "It is now too late ever to undeceive them," a rush of emotion overpowered Irma, and involuntarily she put out her hand and turned deathly pale. Mrs. Fontenoy did not notice it, but some one else did. A full strong figure came quietly to her side, a strong, shaggy head was bent over her, and Dr. John's large, soft hand drew her trembling one through his arm.

"We are glad to see Miss Brazeale. She is tired, I know. We will give her that seat in the corner before we bore her with special introductions."

The low, deep corner seat was in the shadow, and Irma sank into it with a grateful look at her companion. He was not handsome, but what a look of quiet, strong kindness. It calmed Irma, and when he nodded toward a group near her, and said: "We are trying to become acquainted with some wild flowers I found in my ride to-day, and making a failure. We have forgotten our smattering of botany. Can you help us?" she smiled, and said: "Perhaps; I know most of our wild flowers," and took the spike of purple flowers and cluster of pale pink bells, which a fairy hand, sparkling with rings, held out to her.

"This is Miss Gray, my cousin," Dr. John said.

The owner of the little hand bowed, and smiled a little supercilliously.

"So," thought Irma, "this is the heiress, the ex-waif. This the fiancee of this big, intellectual man? How strange!"

She did not know that it is just such dainty, helpless creatures who fascinate men of John Fontenoy's strong grave type. Pretty as a French doll was Fannie Gray. A little gold-ringleted head, lying back among the crimson velvet dimples of the big chair, into which she had thrown her petite, blue-clad figure; a slightly tip-tilted nose, ripe red lips, that could smile and pout in the same minute; tiny ears, sparkling with diamond drops, and pretty arms, round and bracelet-bound—this was John Fontenoy's future wife.

Her dainty prettiness and bright jewels pleased Irma, who had a passion for beauty; but her eyes turned to a amusement so spicy as being made love to. I simply do what they like and invite."

It was true. He was so good-looking all women coveted his attentions. He had the credit of being a lady-killer; but, as he said of himself, he had never made love with any sincerity, and had never been very wildly worshipped. He broke no hearts, and his own had never been scarred.

His present relations to Florence Bellamy, however, amounted almost to an entanglement—thanks to the manoeuvring of his mother and the young lady's persistent passion.

Leaning on the back of Maddie's chair, he said some bright graceful

[illegible] a strange look in her eyes, said Bert, "but it is a beautiful look—sad, startled, proud. And her song, what a sweet, wild thing it was! And that haunting voice!"

He looked down and mused, oblivious of Florence's efforts to attract him.

That night he saw Irma's eyes again and again in his dreams.

And she, when she left the parlor, ran up to her room and leaned against the mantel-piece sobbing, but without tears. Maddie found her there.

"I have brought you your handkerchief and flowers, Ma'm'selle Aimee," she said. Then, as the girl lifted a white sad face, the child impulsively snatched her hands and covered them with kisses.

"Oh, forgive me for making you go down; you were so tired."

"No, not tired, Maddie, only I felt strange and lonesome. I am not fitted for the parlor, I think. You and I will make society for each other. I was brought up in the woods, Maddie—fine company is strange to me."

AN ATTRACTIVE COOK.

A Style of Dress That Will Add Relish to Any Dish.

To the Woman's Home Companion Sallie Joy White contributes a series of papers on "Cookery For Girls," advising the would-be cook to put on this neat and dainty costume: "Wear big aprons—regular pinafores that button in the back and have long sleeves, full bishop sleeves that will go on over any dress, and that are held around the wrists by elastic cord that may be slipped out when the apron is laundered. This pinafore is usually made of white or some pretty print, light colored, because it looks fresher and is just as easy to launder as a dark one. This cooking apron should be worn for no other purpose. You can see for yourself how much nicer it is to come to your work of preparing delicate dishes with an apron which you have not worn while sweeping or doing any other work that would mean getting dust particles in it, even with great care. With the apron is worn a pretty little cap made from muslin or from a pocket handkerchief. This keeps the flying particles of flour from settling in the hair, and it also keeps the hair in place. Then pinned to one side is a small hand towel, and to the other a holder on a long tape.

"You know how often the fingers need wiping while you are doing even the simplest bit of cookery. If you have to step to the towel rack every time, you take many unnecessary steps. Then you know what a habit unattached holders have of getting mislaid, slipping out of sight just when they are needed. Sometimes you can't stop to hunt them up, and then you make shift with anything and perhaps burn your fingers. Well, if you have the towel and holder fastened to the belt of your apron, you don't have to cross the kitchen to use one, and the other can't get away from you.

"Let me tell you something, girls—this dress is a very becoming one, and you needn't be afraid to let any one see you in the cooking cap and apron. My word for it, any dish you may cook will be relished when you wear this sort of costume in its preparation, for in itself it suggests neatness, daintiness and all the rest that goes to make dishes tempting and appetizing."

DANGEROUS DISEASES.

The Difference Between Ailments That Are Contagious and Infectious.

The terms contagious and infectious are not synonymous. A disease is contagious when it is transmitted from the sick to the well by personal communication or contact, more or less intimate, and all contagious diseases are infectious—i. e., they are due to the introduction into the body of a susceptible individual of a living germ. But all infectious diseases are not contagious. Thus smallpox, scarlet fever, measles, diphtheria, influenza, etc., are infectious diseases which are contagious, while malarial fevers, typhoid fever, yellow fever, cholera, pneumonia, peritonitis, etc., are infectious diseases which are not contagious—at least they are only contagious under very exceptional circumstances, and those in close communication with the sick as nurses, etc., do not contract these diseases as a result of such close association or contact.

The generalization that all infectious diseases are due to the introduction into the bodies of susceptible individuals of living germs capable of reproduction is based upon exact knowledge, gained chiefly during the past 20 years, as regards the specific infectious agents or germs of a considerable number of the diseases of this class. In some infectious diseases, however, no such positive demonstration has yet been made.

last deep sleep after months and years of suffering.

My song, save this, is little worth.
I lay the weary pen aside
And wish for health and love and mirth,
As fits the solemn Christmas tide.
As fits the holy Christmas birth,
Be this, good friends, our carol still,
Be peace on earth, be peace on earth,
To men of gentle will.

If these simple but impressive words may be taken as a shadow of what his feelings may have been when called upon to lay aside his pen for the last time, we may well believe that at that sad moment his thoughts were full of prayer for the earthly peace of all.—Detroit Free Press.

"TELL HER SHE MUST."

The Doctor's Mistake, Which Was Corrected by the Married Man.

The family physician puffed meditatively at his cigar for a few minutes before coming down to business.

"I have been to see your wife, as you requested," he said at last, "and I asked you to come in so that I could tell you what should be done. She's in a pretty bad way."

"Indeed?"

"Yes. No regular sickness, you know, but generally run down and in bad shape. With rest and care she'll come out all right, but you'll have to look after her pretty closely."

"I beg your pardon?"

"I say you'll have to look after her pretty closely. You'll have to appoint yourself sort of general overseer or supervisor of everything pertaining to her welfare for a time and be very strict with her too. In the first place, tell her she must"—

"Doctor, are you acquainted with my wife?" interrupted the husband.

"Not intimately at all," replied the astonished physician. "I've been called upon to treat her once or twice, as you know, but that is all."

"Possibly that may be urged as an excuse," said the husband, "but it's not a particularly good one. There are women with whom you are quite well acquainted, are there not?"

"Certainly."

"Married women?"

"Many of them."

"And still you advise me to tell my wife that she must do something or other?"

The physician looked at the husband, and the husband looked at the physician.

"My dear sir," said the physician at last, "it flatters some men to talk to them that way, but I see you are a man of judgment and sense who prefers the truth to all else. Of course what I mean is that you ought to suggest to your wife that, if it is in accord with her judgment, possibly it might be a good thing to follow the advice that I will now give you. Naturally, being married, I know as well as you that 'must' is a word that ought to be eliminated from the English language or at the most confined to the intercourse of parents with children."—Chicago Post.

What Does it Mean?

An interesting phenomenon was visible on Thursday afternoon. Two sun dogs made their appearance in the west between four and five p.m., and to add to the picturesqueness of the scene an abbreviated rainbow appeared in the heavens the reverse way of the sun. The part visible was no doubt a reflex from the original rainbow which was under a cloud and invisible. The funny part, however, is that the shadow should be stronger than the substance. The "oldest inhabitant" says this is a sure indication of unsettled weather.

Who's the Best Man.

E. H. Sills, reeve of North Fredericksburgh, and Robert Perry, last year's assessor of the township, met by chance at the Brisco House on Saturday evening last. Bad blood has existed between the two since the last municipal election, and from hot words they came to blows. The fight was a hot one while it lasted and after the combatants had been separated the services of a doctor had to be secured to dress the wounds of one of the contestants. As Mr. Sills is a high county constable the affair has occasioned much comment, and it is hard to say what may grow out of it.

A Free Fight.

Last week the Deseronto hockey club journeyed to Picton to play the last match of the Corby series with the team of that town. The match resulted in a draw, each side scoring three goals. The last goal claimed by Picton the captain of the Deseronto team would not allow, whereupon a member of the Picton team struck him and a free fight ensued. The spectators took a hand in the melee and hockey sticks, boots, fists, etc. were pressed into requisition. Nobody was killed, but this was not the fault of the combatants. An eye-witness says it resembled a Donnybrook fair in miniature, and the next match between those two teams should draw a big gate if properly advertised.

Death of Miss Wilson.

Miss Mary Wilson passed away at her home in Selby on Friday of last week after an illness of three months duration. Deceased has been affected with heart trouble and her death was not unexpected. She was 55 years of age and highly esteemed for her many estimable qualities. Deceased acted as housekeeper for her brothers, John and Dan, who reside on the homestead, for a good number of years. She was a member of the Anglican church and the funeral on Sunday took place from St. John's church, Selby, to the Eastern cemetry at Napanee. The Rev. W. G. Swayne officiated. Miss Wilson was a sister of Mrs. Schryver, who conducts a grocer store on Dundas street, Napanee.

Archbishop Cleary is Dead.

Archbishop Cleary, of Kingston, passed peacefully away on Thuasday at 1:20 o'clock p.m. Deceased was born in Dungarven, Ireland, on Sept. 18th, 1828. He was a man of high scholarly attainments and the Catholic church, of which he was the respected head in this district, loses an active and aggressve champion. The venerable prelate was made bishop of Kingston in September, 1880. He did much to advance the welfare of his church in this diocese and his death will be sincerely mourned by his faithful children throughout the country.

"Where is Her Wandering Boy?"

Last week Chief Adams ran in a burly tramp who was making himself obnoxious by begging on the street. When the Chief landed his man at the lock-up he showed fight and quite a lively tussle ensued before his trampship was got under lock and key. The fellow appeared before the P. M. on Friday. He gave his name as John Mach. The Magistrate remanded him to gaol for eight days to allow of his record being looked up. He is no doubt a tough customer, as after lying industriously to the Chief for several days as to his place of residence he has at last decided to tell nothing of his past. He is now the man of noname from nowhere. If he told where his home is located he is afraid his poor white-haired mother would ascertain his condition and grieve.

A BELATED ACCOUNT.

Some few weeks ago quite an animated discussion took place at the town council in reference to the fees charged by the Police Magistrate for convictions under the Vagrancy Act. For a number of years the Magistrate has assessed the town $2.25 per each committal, and things went along quietly until Coun. Ruttan, a new man at the council, appeared upon the scene this year and questioned the legality of the Magistrate's actions. Coun. Ruttan

DR. MEACHAM ON SQUANDERING

Some Plain Facts and Figures From a Farmer's Stand-point.

EDITOR OF THE EXPRESS.—I see from the published report of Dr. Meacham's address in the Napanee Town Hall last week that he attempted some vindication of himself in regard to certain criticisms, in regard to his facts and figures in his speech last summer, made by myself in your columns at that time. I do not see, however, that he has made matters any fairer or plainer than before.

What I complained of then and feel there is still reason to complain of is that facts and figures were so presented at that time, and again now during this campaign as to deliberately mislead the people. Figures are given that may suit the purpose and facts are with-held that may suit the purpose, and that purpose is to prejudice the minds of the people against the present Ontario Government. It has long been deemed a contemptable thing to attempt to build up one's self by tearing down the reputation of another. That course is just now being deliberately pursued by the Conservative Candidates in both Lennox & Addington. They are both giving the figures in regard to the surplus left by the Sandfield Macdonald Government and then asserting it has been "squandered" because there is not as much money in the Provincial treasury now. They are constantly asking the electors to condemn the Government because, on the whole, the yearly expenditures have been greater than the yearly receipts during the last twenty-four years. At the same time they carefully avoid explaining how that money has been "squandered." They keep back a part of the truth all the time, so as to better serve their party purposes.

A FARMER'S CASE.

Has not the Province received the money's worth for what has been "squandered"? That is the important question. Supposing a farmer comes into possession of 200 acres of good land, but unimproved and without buildings, and at the same time has $2,000 of money in his possession. At the same time he has an income of $400 a year from other sources. At the end of five years he has expended that surplus money and sold off the timber from 20 acres of his farm, and he has not the money to show for that either. Is that an evidence the man has been "squandering" his property? That depends on just how he has paid his money out. If he has gone on and erected good buildings, built up good fences, put down drains, opened up a good road and done necessary work, all at a reasonable expense, it would be very evident that though he may have less surplus money than before yet he has now his money's worth in another and more profitable form, and is therefore the richer and not the poorer because he has expended that surplus.

HOW THE MONEY WAS SPENT.

The position of the Ontario Government in regard to that surplus is very much the same. The Province needed a number of new and expensive public buildings. These have been erected and paid for. The Province needed a number of new railways, to open up the country to settlers and make valuable much of the public lands not otherwise valuable at all. These railways have been aided out of the public treasury to the extent of millions. Colonization roads were needed to open up new sections to pioneer settlers, just as the early settlers in our old counties once needed aid. These roads have been built, and repaired and paid for. Nearly three million dollars have been spent in that way. The schools of the Province needed public aid to make them as efficient as possible, so that every family in the county might enjoy the full advantages. The Government has aided these and paid out nearly fifteen millions in that way. The poor and sick of our land needed such help as those thus unfortunate ought to receive in any christian country. Our Government has expended nearly three million dollars in erecting and aiding hospitals and similar institutions. Years ago a number of the cities, towns and townships had got pretty heavily in debt in helping railways, opening roads and other improvements they deemed necessary, and they were compelled to pay high interests on their debts. The Government had a surplus drawing but a low interest and it was thought better to aid the people out of their own money. At the same time those municipalities not thus in debt also received their fair and just share. The Government, first and last, paid out over three million dollars in these municipal distributions. be too drastic, it was referred back to the committee to re-draft. At the meeting of the Council on Monday night the proposed "Governor of the Beautiful" was trotted out again. The council went into committee of the whole on the first reading of the by-law, and it was decided to take it up clause by clause. The first clause was read, but like grandpapa's old clock, the council stopped there. This clause calls upon the owner or occupant of any lot or dwelling in Napanee to remove from the sidewalks fronting or abutting the same, all snow, ice, or dirt, befor the hour of ——. Some wanted to make it 12 o'clock noon, others 6 p. m., and a majority objected to the ice clause. The by-law was finally again referred back to the committee, and it may be crystalized into law about the middle of next July, when the ratepayers will need no urging to clear the ice from in front of their residences.

A Hot Game.

The Tigers and the Deseronto High School hockey clubs played an interesting match at the Pollard and Wilson rink on Saturday night. In the first half the Deseronto boys had the best of the game and succeeded in scoring two goals. In the second half the Tigers buckled down to business and kept the visitors on the defensive throughout. Despite their utmost endeavors the Tigers only succeeded in scoring one goal, and the game stood two to one in favor of the visitors at the finish. In the first half Mr. Jamieson, of Deseronto, acted as referee and showed a supreme indifference to offside plays, and this militated against the Tigers. In the second half Mr. Woodcock, of Deseronto, took his place and his decisions gave general satisfaction. The game throughout was scrappy and interesting, and both teams were pretty evenly matched. The following players composed the Tigers: goal, McCoy; point, Pruyn; cover point, Briggs; forwards, Lafferty, Embury, Russell, Burrows. The Deseronto team were: goal, Stuart; point, Prickett; cover point, Cole; forwards, Carter, O'Rourke, Hynes, McMaster.

On the same evening the Monarchs, of Napanee, a junior team, defeated the juniors of Deseronto, by a score of 7 to 3 in a game on Diamond's rink. The Napanee team were: Lane, goal; Pringle, point; Scott, cover point; forwards, Russell, Trimble, Richardson, Detlor.

A Brilliart Affair.

A few social spirits of Yarker, Colebrook, Newburgh, Tweed and Camden East have made the past winter unusually pleasant by forming themselves into a pedro club, the ladies meeting in the afternoon once a week at the home of one of the members, where they thoroughly enjoyed themselves with cards and conversation. Frequently they gave an evening party to which came the gentlemen of the club, who could not attend the afternoon events. At these parties was added to the other amusements dancing and a supper. As Lent approached these parties have become more frequent, and in some cases have partaken of the character of a ball of more than usual brilliancy, notably one given by Mrs. R. Bicknell, Camden East. The wind-up party of the season for the club was given by Mrs. C. H. Finkle, Newburgh, on Frieay evening, 18th inst., and was enjoyed by forty people. It was given in Finkle's hall, Newburgh, which was most beautifully decorated for the occasion. It is admitted by all who were privileged to attend that in grandeur and brilliancy it far surpassed any social event known in this section for many a day. Dressing rooms were arranged for the ladies and gentlemen and card and billard tables were provided for those who wished to enjoy themselves after this fashion. Dinner was served at twelve o'clock on long tables brought ready laid into the hall from hidden recesses, and was of such a character as to add even to the already known reputation of Mrs. Finkle as a genial hostess and successful entertainer. Among those present were: Mrs. F. Wartman, Colebrook; Mrs. Tobey, Mr. and Mrs. W. Dollar, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Connolly, Miss Connolly, Mr. and Mrs. A. Benjamin, Yarker; Miss Ross, Kingston; Rev. and Mrs. Woodcock and Master Woodcock, Mrs. Ryan, Mrs. R. F. Bicknell, Mr. and Mrs. A. Bicknell, Mrs. H. McCarthy, Camden East; Mr. and Mrs. F. Drewry, Newburgh; Miss Baxter, Mrs. and Dr. Oldham, Yarker; Mr. and Mrs. Trickey, Kamloops, B. C.; Mr. and Mrs. I. McAuley, Newburgh; J. Haydon, Toronto; W. Taylor, Tweed; B. S O'Loughlin, Dr. Ruttan and Mr. Dawson, Yarker; William Smith, R. P. Lahey, Napanee.

claimed that the Police Magistrate had no right to collect fees from the town under the Criminal Code, nor under the town by-laws. The matter was finally referred to the town solicitor and to put it briefly that gentleman stated that while their was no authority calling upon the town to pay the magistrate any fees, it did call upon them to furnish that officer with a suitable office and a clerk.

It was pointed out by Mayor Jamieson that in the years mentioned below Police Magistrate Daly remitted to the town $35.50 and received in fees $85.50 as follows:

	Paid in	Received.
In 1895	$12.00	$21.50.
" 1896	10.50	33.24.

Or in other words Mr. Daly received $50 in excess of the money paid over by him to the town in the past three years. As the Police Magistrate furnishes his own office and only received in the neighborhood of $30 a year for doing the town's business the council woke up to the fact that they were straining at a gnat to swallow a camel and they dropped the matter like a hot potato.

But when the town council dropped it Police Magistrate took the matter up. It was pointed out by the town soliciter in his report that in the town of Strathroy the magistrate is paid $50 per year in addition to the regular fees; in Trenton the magistrate receives a salary of $600 per annum; in Picton, Prescott and Gananoque they pay their magistrate a salary, while the town of Deseronto allows its magistrate $2.45 for each case. So much by way of introduction, now for the sequel.

At the regular meeting of the town council on Monday night the following petition was received and read:

Your petitioner, relying upon the intelligence and fairness of your honorable body, since being made acquainted by your solicitor of the universal treatment accorded to Police Magistrates in other towns under similar circumstances will not longer delay in complying with the law to furnish your petitioner with such accommodations as are set forth in the amended municipal law, also in the act known as the Police Magistrates Act, and your petitioner humbly prays that your honorable body will favorably consider his account hereto annexed for disbursements that he has been compelled to incur for the last eight years and order the same to be immediately settled and your petitioner as in duty bound will ever pray.

JAMES DALY,
Police Magistrate.

Feb. 21st 1898.

The account referred to amounts to $702 56, and is made up as follows:

For disbursements for expenses of office, rent, etc, for eight years and three months to date, commencing Nov. 2nd, 1889,—$500, made up as follows: Office rent per year, $36; Fuel per year, $20; Light, $6. Annual expenses $62.

This together with eight years and three months interest on furniture and fixtures bring it up to $702.56.

We do not know whether Mr. Daly is taking a quiet rise out of the town council, or not. The account will certainly not be paid, but the whole thing demonstrates the wisdom of letting well enough alone. Had the matter not been stirred up Mr. Daly would have gone on serving the town as heretofore, but anyone reading between the lines can perceive that it is a gentle intimation that the Police Magistrate will henceforth require the town to supply him with an office at an annual expenditure of $62 per year.

townships in this county have now their share invested to-day and drawing interest ever since. Some others thus paid off their debts which were a serious burden.

Who does not say that all these expenditures were in the interests of the People and of the Province? And yet these yearly sums thus paid out are now all added in to the yearly expenditures and so presented as to leave the impression the money was all "squandered"! Surely demagogueism has seldom reached a lower depth.

SOME ITEMS OF EXPENDITURE.

We are now being told over and over again, that while the Liberal Government has received within the last twenty-five years over eighty-three millions it has expended over eighty-six millions. The people are asked to turn the Government out for that "squandering." Here are some of the ways that money has gone.

Aiding the Schools	$14,835,186
Aiding Agriculture	3,471,714
Public buildings and works	9,355,098
Colonization roads	2,868,007
Aiding railways	6 609,413
Distribution to municipalities..	3,388,774
Aiding asylums and prisons....	15,432,075

Here over sixty millions is at once accounted for. Had the Government refused to thus aid the country the people would have to be taxed in some other form for the purpose. It is easy to see how a Government, and even a very extravagant one, could have thus laid by an enormous surplus and yet have made the people more heavily tax burdened and the Province much worse off than now. What one of these items should the Government have with-held? And yet these are the very expenditures the Conservative candidates now want the Government condemned for!

Would they cut such off, and thus accumulate a surplus? They wish to convey that impression. But what do the sensible, property holding and tax paying people say?

WHAT HAS BEEN PROVIDED.

It may be as well here to mention some of the things that have been provided in the "squandering" of that surplus, but which our Conservative candidates now refrain to even make mention of.

Our new Provincial building at Toronto, costing in all near two millions. The old buildings were put up over fifty years ago and became unfit and unsafe. The Conservatives do not say the sums paid for this were extravagant.

New Lunatic Asylums, at Brockville, Mimico, Orillia and Hamilton and expensive additions to those at Rockwood money was "squandered" on these. The sums thus paid out amount to $3,600,000.

On the institutes for the Blind, at Brantford and the Deaf and Dumb, at Belleville, nearly half a million have been expended, and no complaints of jobbery.

Large sums have been expended in enlarging and improving the Central Prison and in aiding the erection of poor houses in the counties. Had not this been done our municipal taxes would have been much higher.

The Rockwood Insane Asylum has cost over $100,000 which has been paid for. Sandfield Macdonald bargained for it before his government was defeated, but it was not paid for till since.

The Sandfield Government also purchased land and made arrangements to build and maintain an Agricultural College, but these expenses have all been met since.

The list might be much extended. Is it not singular, is it not misleading and unfair, that men like Dr. Meacham and Mr. James Reid should go on adding all these great items of expense in the yearly expenditures of the government and yet refrain from telling what value the country has got for the money expended? Is not the Province better off to-day with all these needed and valuable buildings, with all these aided railways, with all these public institutions and other improvements than it would be with more millions in the treasury and none of these improvements? Is this their evidence that "millions have been squandered?

TOWN COUNCIL.

Council Chamber,
Feb. 21st, 1898.

Council met in regular session, Mayor Jamieson presiding, present, Alexander, Boyle, Vandusen, Ming, Ruttan, Dey, S. R. Miller, F. F. Miller, Madole.

A communication from Police Magistrate Daly was received and referred to the Police Committee.

The Canadian Rubber Co. tendered for the supply of 500 ft. of hose.

Coun. Aylsworth entered.

A communication from Jas. Johnston & Co. addressed to the Tax Collector was read in reference to his personal taxes. It was referred to the town solicitor.

The Auditor's report was ordered to be placed in the hands of the Printing Committee for publication.

The chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee reported recommending payment of A. W. Grange & Bro's. account, and laid before the council samples of hose from the different rubber companies. The agent of the Canadian Rubber Co. was present and was heard in reference to the merits of the hose.

The matter of purchasing 500 feet of hose was referred to a special meeting to be held next Monday night.

Rev. Sterne Tighe addressed the council in the interest of the Kingston General Hospital. He showed what great value the hospital was and the absolute need of its existance. He instanced the great success of the institution in dealing with diseases of all kinds, and especially with diptheria, not one of the patients treated during the past year for this disease having succumbed. The expenditure of the hospital last year was $14,017.42. This year they had been visited by fire and had lost the Watkin's wing. He showed the precariousness of the sources of income and urged the council to make a grant. Last year Napanee had sent seventeen patients, and figuring at the average cost of keeping a patient, viz 62 cents per day, it cost $270.14, to keep those seventeen patients from Napanee.

On motion $50 was granted to the Kingston General Hospital.

A by-law re the removal of snow and ice was given its first reading.

The Poor & Sanitary Committee reported an expenditure from Feb. 5 to Feb. 21st of $24.56

The report of the Police Committee re the fees earned and returned to the town by Chief Adams, amounting to $31, was read and adopted.

Appeals of Jno. Denholm and Jno. Wilson, re dog tax were referred to the Court of Revision.

On motion $40 was ordered to be placed in the hands of the Poor & Sanitary Committee.

The collector was ordered to continue the collection of the taxes until the 1st of May.

Lennox took place at the court house on Tuesday at 11 a.m. Owing to the storm there were very few present and but little interest was evinced in the proceedings. Bowen E. Aylsworth, the Reform candidate, was nominated by Dr. R. A. Leonard and W. J. Black. Dr. W. W. Meacham was nominated by R. A. Fowler, and Allan Oliver. Mr. Aylsworth, appointed William Ryerson Gordanier, of Napanee, as his financial agent and Dr. Meacham appointed William Nelson Doller, of Napanee, as his financial agent. Mr. Aylsworth chose red as his color on the ballot, while Dr. Meacham's choice is blue. The election will be held on the 1st of March. The following are the polling places in Napanee: West Ward No. 1, W. C. Bowen's residence S. S. Mill street; West Ward No. 2, J. C. Clapp's shop, N. S. Dundas street; Centre Ward No. 1, Town Hall; Centre Ward No. 2, Alfred Rendell's residence, S. S. Thomas street; East Ward, James Perry's office, E. S. Dundas street.

The nominations for Addington took place at the town hall, Tamworth, on Tuesday. There was a large crowd in attendance and great interest was evinced in the proceedings. F. S. Wartman, Liberal, and James Reid, Conservative, were nominated, and then the boards were cleared for action. Speeches were delivered by the candidates, and by Geo. W. Dawson, H. M. Deroche, Q. C., J. W. Bell, M. P., and Alex. Karr. The latter speaker came out in his true colors and haranged the crowd in the interest of Jas Reid. Messrs. Wartman, Deroche and Dawson delivered masterly addresses and had the audience with them throughout. Wartman's election is a foregone conclusion.

CAMPAIGN NOTES.

Dr. Meacham addressed a slimly attended meeting at the town hall here on Tuesday afternoon. The Mail's boasting has not inspired the Doctor with confidence as he appealed to the audience to elect him on the ground that a vigilant opposition was necessary.

The Tories are making desperate efforts to defeat "Joe" Haycock in Frontenac.

At the nomination meeting at Tamworth, Alex Karr, who appeared for Jim Reid, got so warmed up that he took the liberty of shedding his coat and addressed the meeting in his shirt sleeves. If the festive Alex isn't careful he'll be contracting a bad attack of pneumonia.

Bowen E. Aylsworth addressed a meeting at Roblin on Monday night; notwithstanding the storm it was fairly well attended.

The meetings in the interest of Bowen E. Aylsworth held at Bath and Odessa on Saturday were largely attended and the utmost enthusiasm prevailed. Messrs. Elliot, Mills, and B. M. Britton, of Kingston, and the candidate delivered stirring addresses. Dr. Meacham was present at the Odessa meeting and delivered a short speech.

Geo. P. Graham, editor of the Brockville Recorder, and the Reform candidate in that constituency, was elected Grand Master of the A. O. U. W. by acclamation at the last meeting of the Grand Lodge.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

IN HER MAJESTY'S SURROGATE COURT OF THE COUNTY OF LENNOX AND ADDINGTON.

IN THE MATTER OF THE ESTATE OF EDWARD J. MADDEN, LATE OF THE VILLAGE OF NEWBURGH, IN THE COUNTY OF LENNOX AND ADDINGTON, CHEESE MANUFACTURER, DECEASED.

Notice is hereby given pursuant to the Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1897, Chapter 129, Section 38, that all persons having claims against the estate of Edward J. Madden, late of the Village of Newburgh, aforesaid, cheese manufacturer, deceased, who died on or about the seventh day of January A. D. 1898, are required to send by post prepaid, or to deliver to Messrs. Deroche & Madden, Napanee, Solicitors for Alice Madden, Administratrix of the said estate on or before the their names and addresses and a full statement of the particulars of their claims, and the nature of the security (if any) held by them, duly verified by affidavit.

And further take notice that after the said fifth day of May, 1898, the said administratrix will proceed to distribute the assets of the said deceased among the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to the claims of which the said administratrix shall then have notice.

And further take notice that the said Administratrix will not be liable for the assets so distributed or any part thereof to any person or persons whose claims shall not have been received at the time of such distribution.

ALICE MADDEN, Administratrix of the estate of Edward J. Madden, deceased, by LEROCHE & MADDEN, her Solicitors.

Dated this 3rd day of February, 1898. 12d

NOT TOO OLD TO BE GIDDY.

A Smoother Out of Wrinkles That Enlivened the Train.

The man's mustache was streaked with gray, and there were a few indications about the corners of the eyes which told of years. Still he was hale and hearty and looked good for many a winter still. The woman also bore evidences of having seen a goodly portion of her youth get away from her. She, like her companion, however, was by no means on the wane. They went to the Grand Central railway station and took a train. They were either soon to be married or were plighted, and they were very fond of each other, if surface indications could be relied upon.

When they entered the crowded car, the man was very solicitous for her comfort. He found her a nice, comfortable seat and saw that her wraps were cared for. Then he took his seat beside her. In order that she might not lack sufficient support in emergencies, he passed his good right arm along the top of the seat back. Then he gazed fondly at his ladylove, for such she was or all signs fail, and waited for her to open the discussion. He murmured something in a low tone. She promptly replied:

"Don't you know I'm getting old?"

She looked as if she did not believe it and expected him to deny the impeachment of her waning charms. The other passengers who heard the remark were willing to acquiesce, but not he. He knew better, and he said so.

"Oh, no, you are not," he answered reassuringly. "You are not getting nearly as old as I am."

This sentiment was received with considerable approval by the outsiders, but the interested persons failed to observe the fact. Then, after one of those pauses which are so eloquent at times, she once more broke the silence.

"Oh, I know all about that," she said. "You are just two years older than I am. That's nothing."

Then there was another silence while the train rattled off a couple of miles more. Papers were laid aside, for the voices unconsciously rose with the occasion and floated to a lot of listening ears, which were not intended to hear what was said. Then once more the man:

"I think it's a great deal."

"But I have so many wrinkles, dear," she said as she leaned confidingly toward him and looked into his eyes with trusting love.

"Never mind that," was the gallant reply. "I'll smooth them all out for you."

"Yah, yah!" gasped the fat man across the aisle. Then he gulped mightily and suddenly became absorbed in his paper as the couple turned confusedly in his direction.

The train slowed up, stopped at the Englewood station, and the couple disappeared from the train followed by the shrieks of the delighted passengers.—Chicago Chronicle.

Twenty years ago England had 11,616 male and 14,901 female schoolteachers. Last year there were 66,310 female and only 26,270 male teachers.

THE ROB

OLD MISSOURI YARNS

TWO GOOD ONES PICKED UP BY THE TRAVELER IN JOHNSON COUNTY.

How the Rev. Dad Heiter Was Chased by Lightning and Beat the Fluid to the Ground—Romantic Story of the White Bridge Over Black Water.

Black Water, Scaly Bark, Big and Bear creeks are the water courses of this county, writes a correspondent of the New York Sun from Johnson county, Mo. There was a time when ghosts, gorgons, horrors and hair raising feeinawfums had their haunts along these streams. Even today one comes unawares upon gravestones in unfrequented places, but the names and epitaphs are worn away.

There is not much doubt that this section was the starting place of many of the stories which drifted and drifted until their identity was lost. The first white comers to this country were from Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee and the Carolinas. The first towns of the county are gone. You meet occasionally a man or woman whose grandparents knew of Columbus and Rose Hill and Beards and Brookstown. But these towns closed up years before the war.

The settlers were deeply religious from their viewpoint. High Blue was the camp meeting spot where the people met annually and worshiped until their fervor was exhausted and the absolute necessities of their various homes called them back.

It was at one of these camp meetings that the Rev. Mr. Heiter told his lightning experience, and the story passed down from one generation to another. One day the writer was riding over what is still known in Johnson county as the Old Shawnee trace—an old road. The other man pointed to a church spire.

"They had hard work to build that church, though," said the Missourian, whose existence had been confined to one county. "For a long time people who lived about here turned up their noses when preachers hitched and alighted. It was all on account of old Dad Heiter. That yarn of his at High Blue made skeptics and lots of infidels. In them days, so I've hearn, preachers had to do other things than preach. Some plowed, and some was builders, and occasionally, when they wasn't fit for anything else, they kept school when they could find enough young ones to make a school. Dad Heiter was a chimley builder, built chimleys to houses. Chimleys in them days was built outside of the house, and was of stone and sometimes of wood, in which case it had to be plastered inside with mud, so the chimley wouldn't catch fire. They had to use scaffolds in building the chimleys, and the scaffold was put up on long poles higher than the chimley.

"Dad was preaching at one of the High Blue meetings when a thunderstorm came up, and most of the congregation wanted to leave and crowd into their wagons or cabins. But Dad Heiter hadn't finished, and he called to the people to show their faith by staying. He said if they would ask the Almighty to hold back the rain until the sermon was over he would do it.

"Then he told of his experience with the lightning. He was building a chimley and was at the scaffold when a storm came up. He told how the lightning flashed and how the winds bent trees. He had the chimley all but finished, and he asked the Lord to tarry the storm until he got through. But the Lord was not inclined, and just then Dad saw a streak of lightning making for him, and he knew he had displeased the Lord in asking too much. So he flung down his trowel and ketchin one of the scaffold poles with his hands he locked his feet on the pole and slid down without putting on any brakes, and the minute he struck the ground the lightning which he had seen coming followed, and came down the pole right after him. Dad beat it down."

"Did the congregation stay?"

"I've heard pap say that his pap, who was there right up in front, leading the singing, said that the congregation would 'a' staid 'cause Dad was a power as a preacher as well as a chimley builder. But Dad hadn't more'n got the words out when a streak of lightning hit a barrel of cider that sot just back of the stand where Dad had been tearing round and split the barrel to flinders and boiled up the cider into steam. Then the congregation left, and the people said it was a sign and that Dad was a wolf in sheep's clothing, and the meeting at High Blue broke up, and some of the converts who was to have been baptized that day backslid, and there was more horse stealing that winter than ever was known in Johnson county."

"What is the connection between Mr. Heiter's lightning story and the church which you pointed out?"

"Nothing, only Dad Heiter lived in this neck of the woods, and you know how long it takes to lame a prejudice."

There is a white bridge over Black Water, a sluggish stream, the banks of which are high and overgrown with willow, which gives the waters all the more doleful appearance.

"This site," said one of the Johnson countyites, pointing to the bridge, "was the only ford on Black Water up to the time of the breaking out of the war. There was a man who lived ten miles back who had a daughter, and she ran away with a young fellow who was not liked by her father. They had several miles the start before the old man found out what was up, and he galloped in pursuit. He came in sight of the elopers right here just as Lochinvar spurred his horse into the water, which was high and swift. The youngsters never got across, and, although the waters run down and search was made for many a day, the bodies were never found.

"For years after the old man's death he used to be seen dressed in white on his white horse and with a shotgun on his shoulder on this very site when the night was the blackest and the water was highest. The ford was deserted, and people went out of their way to escape it until everybody of that time died off and the new generation built this bridge. You see it's white. Well, the story is that the county didn't paint it, nor yet any citizen. And some of the old women say it was painted by the ghost of the young woman who fled with Lochinvar, and that the ghosts keep it painted white in her memory."

Of Interest To Men.

The attention of the reader is called to an attractive little book lately published by that eminent Expert Physician, G. H. Bobertz, M. D., 252 Woodward Ave, Detroit, Mich. This book is one of genuine interest to every man and its plain and honest advice will certainly be of the greatest value to any one desirous of securing perfect health and vigor. A request for a free and sealed copy will be complied with, if addressed as above and THE NAPANEE EXPRESS mentioned.

Dentistry at Sea.

When a sailor on a deep water ship has a toothache, he is likely to go to the captain. The captain gives him something out of the medicine chest to put in his tooth, and if that doesn't cure it perhaps he pulls it. It is a common thing for sailors to pull their own teeth. Their method is to put a string around a tooth and pull it. But dental forceps are carried on deep water ships, on some vessels a fair outfit of them. A ship captain of long experience said that in the course of his life at sea he had pulled 200 teeth.

The ship's medicine chest on large vessels is like a closet or cupboard with a glass door built in the ship. In this chest the medicine bottles, glit labeled, are arranged on shelves that rise one above another in receding tiers. It is practically a well appointed little drug store. There is supplied with the medicine chest a book explaining the uses of the medicines. The captain is likely to have some other book on medical subjects which he has read and studied, and he is likely to have had a good deal of experience before attaining the rank of master of a ship.

The sailors are generally healthy men, but when occasion requires the captain prescribes. He is the physician. Limbs broken at sea are of course set there, and there might be circumstances in which the captain would not hesitate to perform a surgical operation.—New York Sun.

TAMWORTH.

A former popular pastor, Rev. J. P. Wilson, chairman Bowmanville district, is to preach at the Methodist church anniversary here on March 13th, on the following Monday evening he is to give a popular lecture in the town hall. Mr. Wilson is deservedly popular here both as a preacher and socially. Admission to lecture 10c.

Politicians are in no excellent mood as the returns of the elections came in while one party is saying "it might be wise" the other replies, it is much better.

ROBLIN.

Karr the great, the original, and the only exhibited his chamber of political horrors here on Monday night last. A brass band and two lawyers from Napanee were in attendance. Another show, like this and Roblin will be grit forever and ever. The boys say that the big three and their brass band out no ice in Roblin. Rum Rome and the Ross Bible derailed the Karr. The split in the Liberal party that Karr told about was not big enough to admit an Irish agitator. If the Hon. G. W. Ross is a thief according to Karr! who stole the votes at Roblin? The rolling tide that was to sweep Hardy into oblivion, which Karr saw with prophetic eye, was only a drop of sweat hanging to his eye-brow. Karr's story about dog meat and flees is now in pickle. Look out for it at the next Sunday afternoon temperance meeting.—Observer.

WESLEY.

A grand party was given by Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Clancy, of Wesley, last Friday to about thirty-five young folks. Games were indulged in until about 10.30 when supper was served. The Irish Difficulty.

I believe that the full development of agricultural organization points the only way by which the agricultural industry in Ireland can be saved. The Irish farmers, who formerly had to compete only with their fellow workers in the United Kingdom, are now brought into competition with the farmers of the whole world. The time has come when they must intelligently apply to their industry those methods of combination which have been resorted to by those engaged in every other industrial undertaking, and by farmers of other countries. The system by which we are seeking to attain this result has already proved its economic soundness, and it is only lack of funds sufficient to send organizers qualified to educate bodies of farmers, who are ready to listen to them in almost every parish in Ireland, in its principles and procedure, which delays its universal adoption. May I point out that in providing the sinews of war a splendid opportunity is open for some wealthy lover of Ireland to confer upon her people an incalculable boon?

The principle upon which under modern conditions the salvation of Ireland must be sought becomes more manifest every year. The Irish difficulty has long been rather economic than political, and it is more than ever today. Solve the economic problem, and in the process the Irish people will be so elevated and strengthened that they will be able to solve the political problem for themselves. I am firmly convinced that all future attempts to deal with the Irish question on purely political lines are doomed to share the fate of Irish policies in the past.—Right Hon. Horace Plunkett, M. P., President Irish Agricultural Organization Society, in North American Review.

[illegible] Device.

[illegible] a curious way of [illegible] of smoke and [illegible] the tunnel is provided [illegible] a [illegible] curtain, hung at the top so [illegible] when it is dropped it covers the entire mouth of the tunnel. When a train enters the tunnel, the curtain at that end is dropped, and it is kept down until the train leaves the other end of the tunnel. The result is that all the smoke and gases are carried along with the train and forced into the open air at the farther end of the tunnel. It is asserted that this plunger action is so perfect that smoke from an engine seldom reaches as far back as the middle of the train. Scientific men are puzzled to account for the success of the [illegible]—Boston Budget.

AS TRUE AS IS MY LOVER.

A robin in the cherry tree,
Beside the hedgerow swinging,
Amid the snowy blossoms there,
All blithesomely was singing.

Blow gently, winds from heaven's gates,
O'er hedge and orchard cover.
Thy wayward steps and fickle kiss
Are true as is my lover.

And through the trees the sunlight came,
A golden mantle flinging,
While in the tree the robin still
His melody was singing.

Above the drooping, rustling leaves,
O sunlight, softly hover.
Thy semblance fair and changing hues
Are true as is my lover.

And past the hedge a brook flowed down,
A breath of music bringing,
And still among the blossoms white
The robin soft was singing.

Dream on, O brook, with lightsome heart,
Past hedge and garden cover.
Thy careless songs and shallowness
Are true as is my lover.

A GEOLOGICAL PRISON CELL.

An Instance of Nature Coming to the Assistance of the Law.

"Speaking of caves," remarked the drummer whose territory extends from New York to everywhere, "I suppose you don't know that down yonder in the cave section of southwestern Kentucky it isn't unusual for the towns which are built over caves to use them as sewers, and there's many a kitchen with its sink leading right down into the depths of the earth. But an even odder use than this to which nature may be put I discovered in the cave country of Virginia.

"The little town of Eldradge, with a population of 600 or 700, has a large contingent of miners to be handled by the authorities, and when they get ugly they are ugly indeed. Two or three 'coolers' for their accommodation when drunk and disorderly had been burned or torn down by them, and the town marshal was hard put to know what to do. At last the editor of the local paper suggested that the cave in the mountain not 300 yards from the city hall would be just the thing for a calaboose, and the marshal proceeded to investigate. He found that the way then in use to get into it was down a ladder 30 feet through an entrance 6 or 8 feet in diameter, and that when once in the cave the air was dry and good; there was a stream of fine water, and that, though it was dark, the electric light could be introduced easily from the town plant.

"That was his report, and without saying anything much to anybody beds and boards and a few other pieces of necessary furniture were taken down, and on Saturday night when the boys began to whoop it up and were taken in they were carefully let down into the cave by a rope on a portable windlass that had been rigged over the mouth and silence prevailed on the face of the earth. The lights were turned on and it was bright and cheerful; the boys had all the room they wanted; they could do as they pleased (down there), and the loudest noise they could make couldn't possibly be heard on earth. That plan worked with eminent success until one night there was a fight and a man was hurt, and then the authorities fixed up some cages, or pens, and an officer went down first to receive the visitors and care for them on their arrival. It has been working that way ever since and is undoubtedly the safest prison in the whole country and is the cheapest and most enduring."—Washington Star.

Election is over and the Conservatives in this county are jubilant. They have succeeded in electing their man. "Patronism is dead," they cry, and they think they buried it Tuesday night. Well perhaps, but Patron principles remain the same and the thinking farmers of this county are holding as tenaciously to them as when Patronism first dawned here. The upshot of it all will be the combining of the farmers into one solid body that will be an important factor in political affairs. Lennox is to be congratulated on electing a farmer, for doctors and lawyers have had their innings, now let them give the farmers (the backbone of their county) a chance.

CANT BUDGE THEM.

Science is Right 99 times in a Hundred —Medical Science says that Pills and Powders will not Dissolve the Solid Secretions which cause Kidney Disease.—It has Proven that a Liquid Kidney Specific will do so, and Thousands have Testified that South American Kidney Cure, a Liquid Specific for Kidney Disease, has done so.

The secret of South American Kidney Cure's success is the fact that it is solely a kidney specific It dissolves the uric acid which is really the base of all kidney diseases. And it is only when these solid matters and secretions have been dissolved and eradicated from the system that a cure can be hoped for. Pills and Powders from a medical science standpoint, or from the standpoint of common sense, can hardly be expected to do what this liquid remedy has done. The people are learning it. Mrs. Norman E. Cook, of Delhi, Ont., says: "I tried no end of remedies—pills, powders and porous plasters, and all were used in vain. Five bottles of South American Kidney Cure completely restored me to health."

THAT APPLE STORY.

Did Noah Webster Steal It, or Did the Irish Steal It From Noah?

Said an old man who was an ardent admirer of Noah Webster:

"Was Noah Webster a plagiarist or did the English steal from him? I was led to ask these questions by being shown the Universal Spelling Book, published in Dublin in 1839 by T. Tegg & Co., which contains the story of the boy that stole apples, with an exact reproduction of the Websterian illustration. It runs as follows: 'An old man found a rude boy upon one of his trees stealing apples, and desired him to come down, but the young sauce box told him plainly he would not. "Won't you?" says the old man. "Then I will fetch you down." So he pulled up some tufts of grass and threw at him, but this only made the youngster laugh, to think the old man should pretend to beat him out of the tree with grass only. "Well, well," says the old man, "if neither words nor grass will do, I must try what virtue there is in stones." So the old man pelted him heartily with stones, which soon made the young chap hasten down from the tree, and beg the old man's pardon.'

"Now, when I first read that story, something more than 50 years ago, no doubt entered my mind that it was made in Connecticut. And the picture accompanying it—was not that little house Jerry Griswold's, and the 'old man' Priest Pruden? And the boy, did he not bear a striking resemblance to me in my best white trousers? All these impressions remained until recently, when I saw the picture in the Universal Spelling Book, where it looked wonderfully Irish to me. I wish some of you fellows would find out whether Noah Webster was a plagiarist or the victim of British publishers.

"In the 'Universal Spelling Book' under the headline 'Words of Seven Syllables Accented on the Fifth Syllable,' I find circum-na-vi-ga-ti-on, and, under the line 'Words of Five Syllables Accented on the First Syllable,' fa-shi-on-a-ble, and having got so far I didn't wonder any more that some of my Irish brethren find it difficult to catch on to the pronunciation of English words. But that is only a small part of what the 'Universal Spelling Book' contains. It has a treatise on English grammar, followed by the principles of politeness by Philip Stanhope, earl of Chesterfield, and a number of fables, stories, etc., besides the 'Boy and the Apple Tree,'" concluded the old man.—Utica Observer.

An Eastern Shore Question.

Strangers tell us it is a fact that after the formalities of an introduction to an eastern shore man at his own home always follows the question: "Is this your first visit to the eastern shore?" The origin of this custom was set forth by an eastern shore man at a Cincinnati banquet at Newport, R. I., some years ago, when he was twitted about the peculiarity of his countrymen. The story is a true one.

When General Lafayette accepted the invitation of congress in 1824 and came to this country as the nation's guest, a great reception was tendered him at the statehouse in Annapolis officially by the state. The governor of Maryland at that time was an eastern shore farmer, who lived on his farm except when the general assembly was in session or when he was called to Annapolis at other times on official business. Of course his presence was indispensable at the Lafayette reception. His function, indeed, was to introduce the distinguished guest. The governor made the trip on horseback around the head of the bay, clad in a homespun suit made on his own looms. The roads and weather being worse than he calculated for when he left home, he did not reach the capital until the day of the reception and after all the other notabilities were there and waiting for the governor, who was hastily ushered into the senate chamber, his clothes splashed with mud just as he was when he dismounted. The distinguished people in splendid array in the chamber confused the plain and patriotic eastern shore governor, and when he was presented to Lafayette he could think of nothing to say for the moment and blurted out, "Is this the first time you were ever in this country, general?" and from the day the eastern shore governor made that faux pas to this the question is religiously, patriotically and proudly put to the stranger when his footsteps first touch the eastern shore strand.—Baltimore Sun.

Acute Rheumatism

Pains in the Foot and Limb—A Complete Cure Accomplished by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"For a number of years I was afflicted with acute rheumatism in my left side and all the way down my limb into my foot. I live five blocks from my work and had to stop and rest several times in going and coming. I could get no relief from my trouble and was on the point of giving up my job when I happened to hear of Hood's Sarsaparilla. I purchased a bottle of this medicine and a vial of Hood's Pills and began taking them. Before I had half finished them I was relieved and it was not long before I was completely cured. I never lose an opportunity to praise Hood's Sarsaparilla, for my cure meant a great deal to me, as I have a family and must always be at my post." A SCORCHER CURED.

The Standwell Wheelers were annoyed. Half of them, the fastest men in the club, had been to supper at Dicky Carmichael's rooms and were sitting round discussing the situation, with the assistance of Dicky's cigarettes.

"Yes," Carmichael was saying, "I admit he can ride and ride well. It isn't his pace I object to; it's his confounded conceit about it. Soon after he came here I spoke to him about joining the club, and what do you think the fool said? You all know his beastly drawl. 'Well—er—don't think I shall, thanks. Fact is, doncherknow, I like to shift when I'm out. Can't stand crawling at any price.' There's an inflated idiot for you!"

"He passed us when we were out last night," said Royton, "and we couldn't, one of us, hang on to him. He knew it too. He's done that once or twice, and it's only just to show off, I know."

"I was out alone on Wednesday," chipped in Teddy Blane, the club sprinter, "and he caught me up and looked round with that confounded smile of his as he passed. You bet I wasn't going to let him walk away without an effort; but, as you fellows know, I'm better at short distances, and after making it pretty warm for about a couple of miles I had to throw it up."

Far away down in the depths of an easy chair several sizes too big for him sat little Pat Armstrong. Up to the present he had been silent, but now looking up at his companions he said, in his lazy sort of way, "My dear fellows, I've an idea."

There was a general laugh.

"By Jove! Hark at it!"

"Look at what's got an idea!"

"Stick to it, Pat; it's the only one you'll ever get."

They listened, while he laid his plan before them, and for an hour they talked earnestly together. Then as midnight struck they broke up and departed chuckling over the scheme which Pat had devised.

It was a September evening a week later, and the fast gathering twilight cast a dim obscurity over the landscape, when up a hill, at the foot of which lay the little town of Standwell, came a rider.

On reaching the top of the hill the rider paused a moment to regain his breath. As he sat up in his saddle he heard the sound of cycle wheels and turning his head saw another rider, who had evidently ascended the hill close behind him.

This one presented a striking appearance, for with the exception of shoes

NEVER "BROKE" AGAIN.

An Improvident Young Man Who Will Always Have a Dollar In His Pocket.

"Queer things happen at funerals," said a clergyman recently who has officiated at many, "and I remember one occasion which impressed me greatly on account of the standing of the family in which it happened, as well as from the peculiar circumstances surrounding the incident—the bestowal of money on a dead man."

The narrator was urged to relate the story, and on the promise that no names would be mentioned he continued:

"It was a funeral at the house of one of my parishioners, and I was greatly surprised when I received notice to attend and conduct the services. I had not heard of any member of the family being ill, nor had I been summoned to the deathbed, but I jumped to the conclusion that it was an old servant who had died.

"It proved to be a bad son—the black sheep of the family—whose shadow had not darkened their doors for years, but who, it was always believed, had been supported at a distance far enough to prevent him from disgracing the family by his misdeeds.

"Now he was brought home dead, and I was expected to give him as little blame and as much praise as was consistent with the dignity of my office and his relation to the family.

"I need not go into that part of the ceremonies, but come to what I consider the real expression of feeling which consecrated the memory of the man as nothing that I said could have done.

"Just before the casket was closed his old mother arose from her seat with the mourners, and, approaching the dead, slipped a silver dollar into his vest pocket.

"'Jim never liked to be without money in his pocket,' she said, with a low, tremulous voice. 'Many's the dollar I've slipped into his pocket unbeknown to him, but he always found it and was thankful. I don't expect he's going to need it now, and maybe he will never know that mother put it there, but somehow I shall feel better if he has it.'

"And I felt that the woman who had loved much and forgiven much had preached a sermon of forgiveness and mercy before which I with my platitudes must remain dumb."—Chicago Times-Herald.

The Golden Klondike

AN ENORMOUS RUSH OF GOLD SEEKERS GOING IN.

Some Sound advice from one who has made the trip, and knows something of the hardships the Gold Seekers Must Undergo.

In the rush towards the golden fields of the Klondike, there are thousands who are ill-fitted to stand the strain of hardship and exposure, which are inseparable from that trip. Illness disease and death is almost certain to claim many of the ill-prepared adventurers. The following letter from one who has undergone the hardships of the trip, will prove interesting to those who intend going into the desolate but gold laden north:—

SKAGWAY, Dec. 12th 1897.

DEAR SIRS,—My object in writing this letter is to give a word of advice to those who contemplate going to the Yukon gold fields. For ten years I have followed the occupation of prospecting, timber estimating and mining, and the hardships and privations which one has to undergo, are enough to wreck the strongest constitution. In the spring of 1897 I was stricken with pleurisy, as a result of exposure. I recovered from this, but it left behind the seeds of disease which manifested themselves in the form of heart and kidney troubles. I managed to reach Vancouver, but did not have much hope of recovering. I was advised, however, to give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a trial and at first purchased but two boxes. Before these were gone I found beyond a doubt that they were healing me, and their continued use "put me on my feet again," to use a common expression. I then engaged to go to the Yukon country and only those who have made the trip to Dawson City can form even the faintest conception of the hardships that have to be borne in making the trip. Before starting I added to my outfit two dozen boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I can honestly say no part of my outfit proved of such invaluable service to me, and I would strongly urge every man who goes in to take a supply with him, as he will find the need of such a tonic and upbuilder of the system on many occassions. I went in and returned to this place by the Dalton trail, which consists of 350 miles of old indian trail, starting at Pyramid Harbor. In going over the trail one has at times to wade through mud more than a foot deep, and ford streams waist deep in ice cold waters. When I started for the Yukon my weight was only 149 pounds and I now weigh 169 pounds, thanks to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

I am soon starting for another trip to Dawson by the same route. This time, however, the travelling will be on snowshoes, and you may depend upon it Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will again form part of my outfit.

I write this letter for the two fold purpose of letting you know what your medicine has done for me and nrging those who go in to take a supply with them. Every man whether he is sick or well, who undertakes the trip to the Yukon will require something to brace him and keep his constitution sound in that country. I may say that my home is at Copper Cliff, Ont., where my wife resides.

Yours very truly,

and stockings he was clothed completely in white—a white calico jacket with loose knickers of the same material, and on his head a large, soft wide awake of white felt. This latter was pulled so far forward that the rider's face was completely hidden, but it was evident that he was a member of the Standwell Wheelers, for the club badge was displayed conspicuously on the side of his headgear.

The scorcher, however, had but little time to take note of his companion's appearance, for before he was aware of it the white rider, going at a great pace, shot past him and gained a lead of some dozen yards. The scorcher's spirit was roused within him, for it was his boast that he allowed no one to pass him on the road. So, bending low over his handles, he pedaled furiously to regain his lead and soon overtook and passed the Standwell man. The latter, however, at once replied by a sprint which again gave him first position. This was a direct challenge. There could be no mistake about that. The scorcher was amazed. Did a Standwell Wheeler dare to challenge him? Very well, then. That man must learn that no member of the despised club could hope to keep pace with him. So, getting well over his work, he settled down to business and going for all he was worth again passed his opponent.

The pace grew warmer, and on they went, on, on, until trees and hedges seemed to the riders but a blur of green, so terrific was the speed at which they went. Faster and faster over the dusty road, going as though the fiends were behind them, no sound breaking the stillness but the whir of the flying wheels and the click of the chain over the cogs. And the white rider still hung on. Fear took hold of the scorcher and a sickening dread came upon him. Was he, the unbeaten, now to find his match from among the members of that club which he had so openly derided? Perish the thought! He glanced over his shoulder and found that his pursuer had fallen back a dozen yards or so. But this gave him no hope, for during their ride (and they had now come five miles) the white figure had repeatedly dropped away, only to reappear shortly close behind him. And so it was this time. In a minute or two he again took up his old position, and from his easy breathing was apparently as fresh as ever. Not so the scorcher, for used as he was to speedy shifting, the terrific pace at which they had ridden was telling upon him. Suddenly a thought struck him, and as he realized it he almost fell from his saddle. He remembered now what had hitherto escaped his memory, that this road led, with no turning whatever, straight into Standwell and right past the club headquarters. He to be beaten before their eyes and by one of their own riders! It would be eternal degradation to him who had made it his boast that he was faster than their fastest. What would he not give to escape the humiliation which seemed in store for him, and for the first time in his life he longed for a puncture.

The headquarters of the club were now but half a mile distant. On fly the pair and in a few seconds the building is in sight. The scorcher's heart sinks within him as he feels his opponent draw up level with him and to all appearances as fresh as at the start. Until now his eyes have been fixed to his front wheel, but now he glances ahead, and, oh, horror, sees a crowd of members assembled round the entrance of the club. Oh, the degradation of it to him, who had so boasted of his powers! In another second comes the climax, for his opponent shoots ahead, and, flying past the club, leading by lengths, sits up, and, turning round, lifts his hat gracefully, revealing the features of the Flea. He, that youngster of all others, to defeat the hitherto unbeaten scorcher! The defeated one stays not, but with the derisive laughter of the club ringing in his ears pedals home a sadder and a wiser scorcher.

There was another supper that night.

this time at the clubrooms, and if the scorcher could have been present his feelings would have puzzled an analyst.

At the end of the long apartment were stacked six bicycles, light road racers, and on their saddles were hung six white wide awakes. At the head of the table sat six figures, all clad in white and all of very similar build. With these six lay the explanation of the scorcher's defeat, and now to his clubmates, who up to the present had been in ignorance as to the method employed, knowing only that he who had scoffed at them so often had been overcome, Pat Armstrong was holding forth.

"Well, you see, boys, we devised this little business about a week ago and, knowing which way he was riding, put it into force this evening. Fact is, each of us took a mile apiece, so don't give me all the honor. We took up our positions with our jiggers all the way along the road, either behind trees or gates, and as one of us dropped out another took the beggar on and went 'all out' until he came to the next man, who did ditto. I tell you it was fun—grand fun. Of course we all looked alike to him, and he's run off with the idea that I took him on for six solid miles and then licked him. Poor chap!"

FRIENDLESS COYOTE.

TRICKS OF HIS ENEMIES TO MAKE MONEY OUT OF HIM.

A County That Paid Bounty Twelve Times on the Same Set of Scalps—In Spite of Wholesale Killing, the Pest Does Not Appear to Decrease.

The one friendless, hunted Ishmaelite of the plains, against whom is every man's hand, is the prairie wolf—the coyote. If he is adapted to any sphere of usefulness on earth, nobody has yet been shrewd enough to find it out; if he has ever done a respectable deed, it has not yet come to light. The jack rabbit will at least furnish the basis for a savory stew in case of need, the buffalo was valued for its hide, the rattles of the rattlesnake are worth preserving for curiosities, but there is yet to be discovered a method of utilizing any portion of the coyote from his snarling mouth to his ragged tail—except as a fertilizer. The short grass country is his home, the high prairies where the gray, hairlike vegetation that is called pasture blends with the dirty coat of the vandal. Through it he sneaks and runs, now a gaunt figure on the horizon, now an ungainly shape near at hand. He is without acquaintance with anything that is alive, usually solitary, always with a criminal aspect, as if he had just done something to be ashamed of or was contemplating a deed of the sort at the earliest opportunity.

Once the coyote had the whole Indian Territory to himself. He could snarl and fight to his heart's content, and there was none to say him nay. But when the lands were opened to settlement and a family took its place on every quarter section there was less room for the wild creatures of the plains who had before been undisturbed. Then the coyote had to go out among men, and he found that he was a very unpopular immigrant into any of the communities that he favored with his presence. And he earned the right to so be considered honestly. He robbed the sheepfolds, stole the chickens and made the traveler afraid—all without any equivalent in service. Furthermore, he is essentially a coward. The men of the frontier have a sort of respect for the brave creature that defies them or for the cunning one that outwits them, but they can never forgive the trembling one that is alarmed at their very ap-licked him. Poor chap!"

And amid a general roar of laughter he sat down, but they picked him and the rest of his crew up and carried them shoulder high round the room, cheering till all were blue. Then the whole club swore eternal secrecy, and no whisper of the unholy scheme by which he was defeated ever reached the ears of the speed boaster. But he scorches now no more, and the Standwell Wheelers are avenged.—Cycle.

HE WANTED A PERSPECTIVE.

Cause of Wrath of a New York Man Against Ally Sloper.

In Harlem there lives a young man, who up to a year ago or less was content to be known merely as a clever and rising business man, a reputation which he was successfully cultivating. Then something or other gave his ambition a twist, and he decided to shine socially. To this end he proceeded to part his name in the middle, and an exceedingly wide composite part his middle name made. Next he got his father to set up a stable for him and began to figure as "So-and-so, the well known and popular young whip and society man." Certain deficiencies of education and training interfered with his ambition in some directions, but his money and horses gave him a certain prestige of which the most evident effect was the acquisition of a manner which his family and friends described as "highfalutin," "cheesty" and "hooperloo," according to their various vocabularies. That is why they are making merry over a recent take down inflicted on the young man.

Not long ago he had occasion to make inquiries in regard to the course at a certain collegiate institution in this vicinity, not for himself, as he is several years past the age at which most boys go to college, but for a young relative. His letter was written in characteristic style, not wholly exempt from faults of orthography and rhetoric, but very grandiose, and emphasizing the fact that it behooved the institution to take steps toward securing the honor of the attendance of a member of his family. So little did the dean of the college like the tone of the communication that he tossed it into his scrapbasket without taking the trouble to answer it.

How it came into the hands of a certain student of the college, who knew the writer of the letter, does not appear, but that is what happened. He read it and found in it an injunction, not a request, that there be forwarded at once "a perspective of the school." Here was the student's chance, and as he is something of a joker he was quick to take it. Getting a catalogue of the college with an illustration, giving a view of the main buildings, he posted the picture on a sheet of the college writing paper. Then he marked parallel lines of indication along the background of the illustration and attached this legend:

"This is the perspective."

Below he appended this notice:

DEAR SIR—Your honored letter just received. In reply I would say that if by "perspective" you mean "prospectus" you can obtain what you need in the line of instruction in ordinary English at any grammar school. Yours perspectively, ALLY SLOPER, For the Faculty.

Great was the indignation of the youth when he received this letter. He had never heard of that patron saint of jokers, Ally Sloper, and he sent around among his friends breathing threats of vengeance against the college in general and "that cad Sloper" in particular. To several of his acquaintances he showed the note, demanding their sympathy for the blackguardly outrage to which he had been subjected. Their good offices went far enough to restrain him from writing a warlike letter to the president of the college, but not so far as to keep the matter quiet. It has become town talk in Harlem, and to rouse the deadly resentment of the youth with the widely parted name one has only to say to him, "Yours perspectively, Ally Sloper."—New York Sun.

Mortar Affected by Weather.

Builders say that walls built during a rainy season are the strongest, and that when mortar dries quickly it becomes crumbly and possesses little binding power.

ALMOST UNBEARABLE.

"I suffered from kidney trouble so much that the pain in my back was almost unbearable and I felt tired and worn out all the time, my tongue was coated and until I took Doan's Kidney Pills I had been unable to do my housework for over a month. These pills have made a complete cure, all my kidney and bladder troubles have disappeared and I feel like a new one that is alarmed at their very appearance. So, from the farmer's son who blazes away with his old shotgun at the prowling coyote behind the barn to the city sportsman who wastes a cartridge intended for a prairie chicken or duck in ending the life of a wolf trotting along the hedgerow, there is a ceaseless, unrelenting war waged against the luckless wanderer.

Since the immigration of the wolves from the territory into the farming and stock raising states to the north there has been more than a desultory warfare. The farmers have banded together to protect the flocks and herds and have offered generous bounties for the scalps of the creatures, a proceeding that has resulted in the slaughter of thousands. Yet the supply seems none the less, and all the sharpshooting is but a waste of powder and balls. Year after year there are reported from 1,200 to 1,500 sheep killed in Nebraska and Kansas by wolves, and the hundreds of dollars spent for bounties have produced little diminution of the plague.

Sometimes the bounties are not what they are purported to be. The people of a western county found once that they were being taxed very heavily for the payment of this sort of expense and that certain hunters were buying new farms out of the proceeds of their prowess on the plains. An examination followed, and it was found that there was in existence an endless chain in comparison with which the greenbacks and gold reserve make but a feeble showing. At the rear of the county clerk's office, where the redeemed scalps were thrown, was a convenient opening in the wall, and through this the scalps were pulled in the night, to be presented at the counter in the morning for another bounty of $8 each. It was estimated that the county had paid for one set of scalps not less than 12 times, and the emptiness of the treasury was explained. The saddest part of the happening was that the schemers saw the investigators at the hole and became bounty jumpers at once—jumping the county for safer climes.

Another curious circumstance was noticed by the officers of two counties adjoining in central Kansas. The officers of one were paying out money every day for wolf scalps while the others seldom had any demands for the reward. Each of the hunters was compelled to swear that he had killed the wolf inside the boundaries of the county where the scalp was presented, and there was no reason for doubting the truth of the testimony. But what could be the reason of the disparity in the claims? One day a settler's son was questioned:

"Where did you kill this wolf?"

"Down near the edge of the county."

"Are coyotes very thick there?"

"Well, rather, though not so thick as they are farther south."

"Over in the other county?"

"Yes, there are more there."

"But they do not kill any there. Why is it?"

"The other county only pays $1 for scalps and this pays $2. So we drive them over the line before we shoot them."

The county officers at once readjusted the scale of rewards.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Dragged from a Condition of Physical Wretchedness and Misery.

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND WAS THE DELIVERER.

Mr. Barrand Says: "Surely the Medicine Which Has done so much for Me Will Prove a Blessing To Others.

Most Desperate Cases of Rheumatism are overcome by Nature's Cure, Paine's Celery Compound.

The Only Remedy for Pain-racked and Stiffened Limbs.

WELLS & RICHARDSON CO.,

DEAR SIRS:—Just a year ago I was attacked by inflammatory rheumatism in its most acute form, which totally incapacitated me from pursuing my trade—that of a tailor—or in fact from doing work even of the very lightest kind, as every nerve in my body was affected. I was in this distressing condition for more than seven months, when I commenced to use Paine's Celery Compound. I soon began to realize the beneficial effects of the medicine; but my case was an obstinate one, and required the persistent use of the Compound for several months before I was able to move about. I am thankful to say I am so far recovered that I have commenced work again; and I am very hopeful that by continuing the use of the Compound a little longer I shall, please God, be restored to my wonted health and strength again. Surely the medicine that has done so much for me will prove an equal blessing to others similiarly afflicted; and to such I say, "Give Paine's Celery Compound a trial." For what your medicine has done for me you have my most grateful thanks.

Yours truly,

JOHN BARRAND, Barrie, Ont.

SEVERE HEADACHE CURE.

DEAR SIRS—Being troubled with a severe headache, I was advised by a friend to Laxa-Liver Pills. I only used half a bottle, and have not since suffered from the complaint. They seem to be a perfect cure.

MRS. JOHN TOMLINSON,

The Letter H.

I remember hearing a church warden in one of our large manufacturing towns read in the lesson the following odd statement from the epistle to the Romans, "And if children, then hares," a somewhat strange piece of reasoning. In the same connection still with reference to the insertion of this much abused letter, I heard a funny story the other day. There is a village in the eastern counties which rejoices in the name of Haw. A parishioner was asked what he thought of a strange preacher who had been holding a service in the village. "Well," he said, "I liked the gentleman, 'is tex' was just suited to us folk." "Why, what was his text?" "It were a tex' from the Psalms, 'Stand in hawe and sin not'—it sounded so 'omely loike."—Cornhill Magazine.

Not Up In Nautical Lore.

At sea, as many people know, time, instead of being reckoned by hours, is divided into watches of fours each. From 4 o'clock to 6, and 6 o'clock to 8, there are half divisions, nautically termed dog watches. In an insurance case the counsel asked an old sailor what time of day a certain collision occurred and received the reply:

"About the middle of the first dog watch."

In summing up the case the barrister enlarged upon the information thus imparted as follows:

"You can imagine, gentlemen of the jury, the care which existed on this occasion, when, as appears from one of the plaintiff's own witnesses, this valuable ship and her cargo and the lives of passengers and crew were intrusted to what, gentlemen?—why, to the mere watch of a dog!"—English Paper.

A Good Answer.

In a public school examination, lately held, an eccentric examiner demanded: "What views would King Alfred take of universal suffrage, the conscription and printed books, if he were living now?" The ingenious pupil wrote in answer, "If King Alfred were still alive, he would be too old to take any interest in anything."

CHAPTER V.

But Irma's nature was too buoyant to stay long under a cloud. The life at Live Oaks attracted her. Its good humor, its variety, its easy-going comfort, were delightful to a girl of vivid fancy, reared among gloomy, monotonous surroundings. She could not resist the charm of kindness and pleasant companionship. They drew her in the circle of the Fontenoy household.

The evenings in the sitting-room became more full of enjoyment. She did not play often. She preferred to listen to Bert read something new and bright, or to hear them all talk—sometimes to talk herself. Her quaint fresh ideas always delighted Bert.

She was learning to play chess with Dr. John. His fiancee declared, with a shrug of her shoulders, that chess made her think, and thinking gave her the headache.

John often dropped in for an hour in the evening—seldom longer. He was a hard worker and devoted to his profession. Much of it was charity. Belle, who belonged to half a dozen benevolent societies, often went with him to see these poorer patients, and carried soups and jellies of her own making. She was a model housekeeper and believed in fulfilling all her duties to her home, as well as to society and her church. She drew India-rubber gloves over her white hands and handled the hoe in the flower-garden and the broom and the duster in-doors. She looked after the linen closet and inspected Maddie's drawers, bringing all rents and tears to light, and keeping the scapegrace in terror of her lady-like scoldings.

Irma found all the household interesting. If "Her Highness" was cold and the little Fannie supercilious, they were still interesting to study. With her quick, romantic instinct she detected the little dramas going on around her, and tried to lose sight of her own fears and memories in watching them. The superb Belle had a heart under her snowy breast, and it beat more warmly (Irma guessed) for the poor tutor than the rich judge. But would she obey her heart's dictates? She gave him cold encouragement now, and he kept his feelings under stern control. Fannie Gray—did she love the big-hearted plain man, who let her rule him in such dainty but tyrannous fashion? And Bert, was he the lover of the fair Spanish blonde—Florence Bellamy, who was a favorite with his father and stepmother? She was his equal in family and wealth, and she loved him. Last night he certainly put to his lips the rose she gave him from her bosom. Did he love her?

"What should it matter to me?" Irma would say, breaking off from these speculations that took her out of herself. "I am but catching at floating straws as I drift down the current. Drift where? How soon will I be dashed against the rocks?"

Always, she had that sensation of being adrift—the sport of Fate.

But she tried to shut out apprehension and live in the present. One day she had been almost happy. It was Saturday and a holiday. John had invited them to his house, Grobeck, the little Gothic stone cottage near the town, but seeming in a solitude, so shut in was it by a stone wall, ivy-covered, and a large yard full of old trees and shrubbery. They had gone on horseback. Irma had been used to riding all her life, and it was a joy to see her sweep along on a lithe little pony, fearless and graceful, her cheeks flushed and a light in her dark eye, she held Bert to her side. John met them at the gate, and gave them the "run of the house," he said, warning them that there was a Bluebeard's chamber. They went all over the queerly built little cottage, peered into Dr. John's skeleton closet and his studio, where his big-horned owl was nodding and his yellow cat purred on the table on an open book upon anatomy.

They even peeped into the Bluebeard's chamber, against which he had warned them, and found it to be the brother of Solon, from whom we get these particulars, does not believe that the girl drowned herself. He has heard that a woman in a boat was seen both on the bayou and on the river at the time when she would have been making her escape. He has forwarded a minute description of the young would-be murderess to the police authorities here, and they are at work on the case. It seems that she is a brunette of very peculiar type. She is handsome and accomplished—particularly in music and French. Her victim was not dead, at last accounts, but there is scarcely a shadow of hope that he can recover, as he lost a great quantity of blood and a low fever has set in.'"

Irma listened to this from first to last. She had been in the act of leaving the room when the first words arrested her steps and seemed to turn her into stone.

She stood listening with dilated eyes, her fingers crushing the flowers she had been carrying to her room—flowers Bert had gathered for her from John's garden. She heard Mr. Fontenoy's comments upon her deed, his speculations as to whether the girl were mad or simply a deliberate criminal. She heard, but they made no impression upon her. The words of the newspaper article were burning in her brain:

"No hope that he will recover; police at work on the case."

A gasping breath betrayed her. Bert looked up and sprang to her side.

"Miss Brazeale, what is the matter? Are you ill?"

She made a desperate effort and shook her head. She tried to smile.

"I rode too fast," she said, huskily. "I am a little tired. I will go to my room."

He would have gone with her, making her lean on his arm, but she would not let him.

"I am quite well, now," she said.

She threw herself on the bed and lay there motionless. Her temples burned, but her limbs felt chill and numb.

"I shall soon strike on the rocks," she said to herself. When the tea-bell rang she rose and removed her riding-habit and tried to get ready to go down for appearance' sake. She could not bear to have him suspect her yet. But her fingers trembled too much to pin collar or bind hair. She gave up the idea of going to tea. The thought of the bright room and questioning eyes was too much for her. But she could not be still any more. A spirit of restlessness seized her.

"I will go and walk till I am quiet," she thought.

She threw a hood over her head and without any wrap she went down-stairs and out into the yard by a back way. As she ran down the steps, she became conscious that it was raining—a soft, misty rain. She only thought:

"It will cool my head."

The moon was nearly full, and the rays struggling through the veil of clouds made a soft twilight.

Irma made her way to the mulberry-trees which extended across a part of the back yard at a little distance from the house. The thick, green leaves nearly sheltered her from the rain as she walked from one end to the other of the mulberry colonnade. For a time she could think of nothing coherently. Images of blood and violence, of exposure, disgrace and imprisonment whirled dim and fast through her brain. After a time, she became conscious of present conditions. She heard the sounds of talk and laughter coming from the parlor. Presently the sound of music—of singing. Florence Bellamy's voice—how well she sang to-night. And was not that Bert Fontenoy singing with her? In her fancy she could see the two, so handsome and assured in their manners—so gently proud—as they had a right to be. They had no dark secret in their lives. They were not hiding under a false name. They were well fitted to each other. They had a right to love and marry. Oh! how gayly they were all talking. Nobody thought of her, nobody cared. She did seem to hear her name called awhile ago, but it was doubtless a mistake. Or it was Mad-

"Bertrand!" called a shrill, sweet voice from the house.

"That is your mother's voice. Let us go in," Irma said, seeing that he would not go without her.

She thought to escape to her room unseen, but he quick ear of Miss Gray heard their steps, and she ran to the parlor door.

"THOUGHT MY HEAD WOULD BURST."

A Fredericton Lady's Terrible Suffering.

MRS. GEO. DOHERTY tells the following remarkable story of relief from suffering and restoration to health, which should clear away all doubts as to the efficacy of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills from the minds of the most skeptical:

"For several years I have been a constant sufferer from nervous headache, and the pain was so intense that sometimes I was almost crazy. I really thought that my head would burst. I consulted a number of physicians, and took many remedies, but without effect. I noticed Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills advertised, and as they seemed to suit my case, I got a box and began their use. Before taking them I was very weak and debilitated, and would sometimes wake out of my sleep with a distressed, smothering feeling, and I was frequently seized with agonizing pains in the region of the heart, and often could scarcely muster up courage to keep up the struggle for life. In this wretched condition Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills came to the rescue, and to-day I state, with gratitude, that I am vigorous and strong, and all this improvement is due to this wonderful remedy.

streaming in at the window, wakened her. A mocking-bird was singing in the orange tree below.

She threw on a wrapper and went to the window. A singular cavalcade met her eye. Madcap on her bob-tailed pony, and behind her, clinging to her with a frightened grip, a sallow mite of a girl who lived in a cottage not far from Live Oaks, whom Maddie had taken under special patronage.

A little negro in a ragged jacket and brimless hat, mounted on a tall, bony mule, acted as outrider, and the dog Gitup and two other curs of low degree brought up the rear.

The Madcap saw Irma and waved her hand to her.

"I'm taking Pansy out to ride for her health. She's got fever-cake, and Maum Viney says nothing will cure it but to ride a hard trotting-horse. Goodness knows, Flea is hard enough. He's a regular churn!"

Irma laughed before she knew it, a merry little laugh. Then she started guiltily. How dare she laugh? And yet, what was the use of yielding to despair before the crash came? Why not take all the brightness life offered, and then when the night of misery fell bear it with what courage she might!

This was her philosophy, taught by her own buoyant instincts. She acted upon it. She thrust back her gloomy apprehensions and lived only in the present.

There was much to divest her. Her school duties were not arduous, and after these she mingled with the household as one of them. Mrs. Fontenoy would tolerate no slight to the daughter of her best friend. And yet Mrs. Fontenoy watched her son's increasing interest in Irma with no little anxiety. She had set her heart on Bert's marrying a woman with family position and money. And she had selected Florence Bellamy.

A new diversion was at hand. One day Maddie burst into the room with cheeks aflame.

"We are going to have a new sensation at Live Oaks. Belle is going to have an entertainment—a religious benefit. You must know Belle is very religious. She subjected my poor, dear tutor because he refused a professorship to go into the itinerant Methodist ministry. But she is a worshipper of Dr. Richards, the showy pastor of her church—the Episcopal. He had a big name and was in charge of a church in New Orleans. It was a hard struggle to get him here, he stood out for so much salary; but the big-bugs—papa among the rest—raised the bid and he came. But he turns up his Greek nose at the Parsonage, and so does his fair little statue of a wife. Belle has undertaken to have it repaired and refurnished, and this is her first effort in that direction—an entertainment here watched them, and found it to be the loveliest little room, fitted up in gold and white—a shrine waiting for its idol. They rambled over the old orchard and peeled late peaches, sitting on the low boughs or in the long grass.

They came back before sunset. There were tokens of a change in the sky. Clouds had gathered, and the sun was setting luridly. But the light from the windows of Live Oaks shone brightly. The drawing-room was gay with fresh flowers. Florence and a young girl cousin had gathered them and filled the vases and baskets. Florence, dressed in white, stood at the parlor door to receive them. The day's mail lay on the table, and Belle and Bert and Dr. John and Miss Gray were soon busying upon letters. Fannie had half a dozen dainty, perfumed envelopes to break. Only Irma had no interest in the mail.

"Miss Brazeale, I have never known you to get a letter," Fannie Gray said.

Irma colored.

"I have no correspondents," she answered.

"I wish I had none," Bert said. "There's a fellow writing that he is coming here to see me, to stay, he doesn't say how long."

"What sort of fellow?" asked Miss Gray, looking up with interest.

"Oh, he's a clever chap enough, a writer, a newspaper man, a born detective. I found him capital company in New Orleans once, and he helped me in a matter in which I would have found it hard to get on without his aid."

"Then why are you not glad he is coming?"

"How do I know if he is the kind of fellow one would like to have domesticated in one's home, where there are women folks? I had bachelor rooms in town when I invited him. I can write to him about the change."

"Do nothing of the kind. Let him come. If he proves to be dangerous we can ship him over to John at Grobleck," said Miss Gray with decision. "And now, Bert, read the paper to us before tea. I am glad John is having a fire made, a little aesthetic wood-fire. It has turned cool, and it is raining. Isn't it?"

Bert unfolded the newspaper and began to read. Irma was not interested. She was about to slip out of the room, when her attention was suddenly, fearfully arrested.

"Why, what a queer tragedy!" cried Bert. "Papa you know Solon Vanhorn the rich, cranky old cotton-merchant? Well, he has been killed by a woman he had just married. Listen:

"'A SINGULAR TRAGEDY.

"'For some time, our well-known fellow citizen, Mr. Solon Vanhorn, has been missing from his place of business on Levee street. It was not known what had become of him. His friends conjectured he was carrying out some large business operations in New York; but now comes the startling news of a strange tragedy of which Mr. Vanhorn has been the victim. For some time he has been engaged to a young girl, the daughter of one of his cotton partners living in Black Bayou, in the parish of St. Simon. He had gone to consummate the marriage, and it had taken place smoothly and quietly when, as the bridegroom turned to kiss his newly made bride, she suddenly stabbed him in the neck, nearly severing the artery. The blood poured from the wound, and Mr. Vanhorn fell, crying that he was killed. The girl gave one look at him and fled from the house. It was supposed she drowned herself in the bayou. A part of her dress was found at the water's edge. There was no boat known to have been at hand in which she might have made her escape.

"'Mr. Michael Vanhorn, however, doubtless a mistake. Or it was Maddie, who needed help in her French lesson. No; nobody wanted her. Nobody but the detectives who were hounding her out.

She started as a tall figure stood before her in the semi-darkness. In her state of nervous excitement the sudden apparition almost evoked a scream of terror. But she soon recognized Bert.

"Mr. Fontenoy, I did not expect to have any one follow me here," she said coldly.

"Forgive me for the intrusion. I was afraid you would make yourself ill. It is chill and misty, and I brought you a wrap, the first one I could find."

"You are kind," Irma answered gently.

She let him fold the shawl around her.

"Thanks, and do not let me keep you out here."

"But will you not come in? It is very pleasant in the parlor. We have a little fire of fragrant cypress wood that crackles merrily."

"I am not cold, and I am not fit to be a talker or a listener to-night."

"That means that you do not want me here, and I will go away presently. Let me take one turn with you, if you will permit in walking under these dark, weeping old trees."

He took her hand and drew it through his arm.

"You said you were not cold; your fingers are like marble."

"But my head is burning," Irma said. She had pushed the hood back, and rings of her dark hair were showing beneath the fluffy crimson border. Through an opening in the boughs the struggling moonlight came and showed Bert her shining eyes, her scarlet lips.

"You are ill; you must let my brother prescribe for you."

"There is nothing the matter with me," she said impatiently. "Only I am a little restless. I take that mood sometimes."

Bert was silent. There was something the matter with her, and he felt sure of it. It was mental trouble, too, not physical. He had been watching her closely for days. He had noted her changeful moods, her girlish gayety suddenly quenched as by some haunting thought, the shadow of pain that came into her eyes, her restlessness, her occasional startled look. And to-night, what was the meaning of her fit of sudden agitation in the parlor? It came while he was reading of Solon Vanhorn's tragic wedding. But she could have nothing to do with the murderous bride of Black Bayou. There was some mystery about this girl—this strange child-queen—girl, who was not like any other woman he had ever met.

He looked at the pale, repressed face under the scarlet hood.

"It is no evil mystery," he thought. "I would stake my life on her purity! It is a sorrowful secret, perhaps; I wish she would confide in me."

He longed to take the cold little hand that lay on his arm. He longed to ask her to let him be her friend. He had no thought that he was failing in love. He expected to marry Florence Bellamy some time. It would gratify his mother, who idolized him, and please his father's pride. Besides, Florence loved him, and he was conscious that he had many times been too tender for mere brotherly friendship.

She was high-spirited, too. Neither she nor her family would brook being trifled with.

No; he would marry her some time, but just now he was more interested in his little sister's music-teacher. It must be her eyes that attracted him so—their sphinx-like mystery and melancholy. Or was it her voice? How thrilling were its intonations just now when she said:

"They are singing something that sounds very sweet! Go in and hear them. It is so much pleasanter than here."

"I had rather stay in the mulberry walk with you."

"But it is damp, and I am a dull companion."

"I do not find you so. Your mere presence is magnetic. Magnetism radiates from the tips of your little fingers!"

He just touched them as he spoke, but he felt a thrill through all his frame.

He had spoken lightly, but there was an under-current of earnestness which Irma felt. It embarrassed her; and, to break the silence, she said:

"Who is singing with Miss Bellamy? I thought the other time it was you."

"It is some gallant from the town. There are two of them who came in. I have not sung to-night; I have been hunting for you, Madcap and I. We hunted for you disconsolately from room to room. At last the bright idea occurred to me of going out on the back veranda. There I caught a gleam of a red hood as a ray of light fell upon it. Without a word to Madcap, out I came!"

"Dear me! what a night to choose for promenading," she cried. "How romantic we are!"

Bert gave her a look which expressed he thought it was none of her business. Irma felt that Belle's disapproving eyes were upon her, and that Mrs. Fontenoy was looking at her wonderingly.

"Miss Brazeale felt feverish, and went out into the fresh air; I saw her, and carried her a shawl," Bert explained, curtly, in reply to his mother's look.

"She is feverish," Dr. John said, gently laying his fingers on her pulse. "I fancy you have taken too much exercise, Miss Aimee. A good rest will get you right."

"I have no doubt of it," she said, and, with a bend of her head she passed on upstairs.

"She looks like the heroine of a romance," Miss Gray said. "I wish to goodness something tragic would turn up about her, just to break the monotony of Live Oaks. We will all stagnate here. By the way, Bert, you did not tell us the name of your self-invited guest."

"He is not exactly self-invited, I told you. His name is Harold Vane."

"Harold Vane!" she repeated, quickly, a flush leaping into her soft cheeks.

"Yes; but he writes under the name of Cyril Thorne. Do you know him?"

"I have—seen—him," she answered, slowly.

For awhile she was silent, a rare thing with her.

"Who is this Vane? Where did you pick him up, Bert?"

"Don't you remember, sir, that young journalist who helped us ferret out the frauds in the cotton-burning business on the 'River Queen'? He was reporter then for The New Orleans Picayune, but he is a natural detective, and he told me he often exercised his talents in that direction. I liked him first-rate. He is a capital story-teller, and he proved himself a sharp one in that cotton business."

"We paid him, I remember. But I feel under obligations to him all the same. Write to him to come. I suppose he is respectable?"

"I should say so," struck in Miss Gray. "Harold Vane is a jet in literary circles. I could endure him myself. He is rude; he puts on airs of indifference."

"To women," said Bert. "I think he is not much of a lady's man, good-looking as he is."

Upstairs, Irma, looking her fate in the face, was wondering how long it would be before the end came, and her glass bark shivered on the rocks.

"Oh! to think I killed him! But I did not mean to. Of course, they will find me. It will be easy to trace me here. If they had only believed I was drowned."

Then, after a little pause:

"The young man on the bank did not betray me. Why, I wonder? I took his boat; I would not let him come with me. They offered a reward for information about me. Why did he not speak? Was it through pity?"

She recalled his face in that one glimpse she had of it by the lightning-flash. What if she knew that at this moment they were discussing the same man down-stairs; that he was soon to arrive at Live Oaks; that he was a born detective, and that he was often employed in that line!

It was long past midnight before Irma's excited brain found rest. But youth and nature asserted themselves, and she slept at last, a sweet, dreamless sleep, which lasted until the sun, that direction—an entertainment here. It is not to be the stereotyped concert—Cousin Fannie vetoed that. We are to have some good music and scenes from the best plays, acted in costume on a stage with a drop curtain and dressing-rooms—only think! And we are to have a few tableaux. Belle is making out her programme. You are to sing a duet from 'La Favorita' with Mr. Green, the slim tenor who has the sickly moustache and sings in the choir. Cousin Fannie is in two of the drama selections, and Florence Bellamy has part, and Miss Pepton and Bert and—But I am all out of breath. I must tell you, though, where it is to be. You can't guess! In the long hall downstairs with the shell floor. It's just a grand place, isn't it? Kind of out of doors, because the arched windows are so big and open to the ground, and they are all hung with ivy, so the Japanese lanterns will show so prettily among the green. There is to be a large stage at one end, and seats for five hundred people or more. Won't it be grand?"

It sounded grand to Irma, who had never seen anything of the kind in her life. She had an instinct for the drama. She had read Shakespeare's plays with her mother, and all the old British dramas. In the deep bayou forest she had often declaimed passages of these and acted parts of them that struck her imagination. She had listened, thrilled to the core, to her mother's account of the acting of Forrest and Charlotte Cushman. Of course this entertainment would be but a pale shadow of the stage, but the thought of it excited her.

She was present at the first rehearsal, and her intelligent look made Bert turn to her for suggestions. She forgot timidity in her interest, and gave her ideas of how passages should be rendered, and movement carried out. They were always good, because they were true to nature and to a strong and pure imagination.

"You must have been on the stage," sneered Miss Gray.

After the rehearsal was over Bert came over to the window where she was sitting.

"I wish to heaven you had Miss Pepton's part, or Florence Bellamy's," he said, leaning over her. "They are nice girls, and, as Belle says, drawing cards because of their society influence. But they are perfect puppets. They have no power to throw themselves into a fine part. Have you acted much? Your looks and movements in every-day life somehow suggest the romantic and tragic drama to me. I wish you would tell me of your past. I wish I knew all your life."

"It would not edify you. Let us either talk of anything else." And she began to speak of Miss Pepton's beauty, and how lovely she would look as Portia in the casket scene, and how saucy she would look as Lady Gay Spanker.

Bert shrugged his shoulders. He found more beauty in the face he looked on then, with the moonrays lighting its poetic curves and strange, sad eyes. Daily he became more fascinated by this Aimee Brazeale, as he believed her to be. All his thoughts were of her—wondering as to her past. He plied his mother with questions about her, until pushing the hair from her white forehead and looking at him with eyes that tried to read his, she said :—

"Bert, you are falling in love with Aimee Brazeale."

"What nonsense!" he exclaimed, with an impatient backward toss of his head. Then he added, "What if I were falling in love with Aimee Brazeale? Is she not worthy to be loved?"

"Yes," sighed the mother, "but you are my only son. I had a right to expect that you would marry to please me. You can have a wife with money and social position."

"Florence Bellamy, you mean. She is not worthy to be the hairdresser of Aimee Brazeale. Aimee Brazeale is a woman to win a man and hold him."

"She has been trying to win you. I am surprised at her, disappointed in her."

"She has done nothing of the kind. She has avoided me. I doubt exceedingly if she would accept me if I offered myself to her."

"You doubt it? You are not sincere, Bert."

"I doubt it, I repeat. I have had a thought of testing it, but you and Florence Bellamy have managed it so that I hardly have a free man. But if I were wholly free, and asked this girl to be my wife, I should feel very doubtful of her answer."

"As if she would be so mad as to refuse him," murmured the doting mother. "I am sorry I brought Aimee Brazeale here. I can see her strange charm herself. Bert speaks the truth. She does not seem to try to win him, though I have seen her face light up when he came to her side. But that is natural. I must find some pretext for sending her and Maddie away—to my aunt's on the Teche."

The night of the entertainment came. A feeling of foreboding came upon Irma, but she resolutely shook it off. She went to her room to dress. She knew her tableau costumes would be provided for her, but she expected to wear her black lawn to sing in. She lighted her lamp, though the afterglow was still rosy outside. There, on the bed, shimmered something white and silvery. She took it up. It was a dress of nun's veiling and white silk. The bodice was white silk with silver cord. Pinned to it was a little note :—

satin with slashings of crimson velvet. There were five young ladies and some girls of twelve and fourteen dressed as maids. There were six young men, most of them in showy costumes of knee-breeches and velvet tunics with gold lace and plumes. Irma could see how Bert surpassed them all in grace and beauty. He was standing by Florence Bellamy, and she was talking to him, but he smiled in an absent way, and his eyes wandered about as though in search of some one. Presently his little sister appeared on the scene looking very girlish and simple in her white frock and long hair plaits.

"Come here, Madcap!" he cried. He bent down and kissed her, at the same time he whispered in her ear :—

"Where is your little music teacher? Where is Miss Aimee Brazeale?"

"She went out there on the verandah awhile ago," answered Maddie.

Madcap never could whisper properly, her brother always declared. Her answer was heard by Florence Bellamy. She gave Bert a keen look and turned off. Disregarding it, he slipped away from the group, and went out on the verandah. Irma stood looking out at the brilliant grounds below. The vari-colored lights fell upon her. Bert started when he saw her. He had never seen her in evening dress before. He approached her almost shyly. He was dressed as Claude Melnotte and he filled Irma's ideal of the character. He came close to her, and took a little box from his pocket.

"I have, not forgotten," he said, "that you told me—a week ago—that to-day is your birthday. I have brought you a little gift to show that I remembered it."

He held up a gold bracelet set with pearls.

"I cannot, indeed I cannot take it," she said.

"But you must. It was made for you. See, the pearls form your name. You would not hurt me by refusing to wear it?"

He took her round, white arm, and clasped the bracelet upon it.

"You must not refuse to take it," he said in a voice half-entreaty, half-command. "And you must let me talk to you to-night. I will not consent to be put aside for the new friends who will be sure to gather around you."

Belle was calling him. He hurriedly pressed Irma's hand to his lips, and was gone. She stood there feeling guilty and unhappy. She must put an end to this. It was sweet, oh, it was inexpressibly sweet to be loved by this ardent, handsome, graceful man; but it was a sin to allow it, a base sin of ingratitude against the people whom she had already deceived, and against this young man, who thought her innocent and pure.

"It is a novel task to me," said Irma.

It was, indeed, but she took to it intuitively, and proved a ready assistant. It required all Belle's coolness and decision to make things move smoothly. She was much worried by the non-arrival of the blonde tenor, who was to sing, with Irma, the duet from "La Favorita." At the last moment he sent an excuse—a sore throat.

"If we had known before, we might have provided a substitute," said Belle. "But, now, who will take his place? The duet is beautiful. It is a great pity to throw it out."

"Some one may turn up," said Bert, consolingly. "I will try to drum up somebody. We have some pretty fair singers in the audience."

As he spoke a card was handed to him. He glanced at it, and then at Miss Gray.

"He has come," he said. "The fellow you can't endure—Harold Vane."

"He is here," she answered, and the pink that came into her cheeks was deeper than the rose color of her Pauline dress.

"He will write some nasty criticisms about us, or he will praise us in his sarcastic way. I wish he had stayed off till to-morrow."

Bert went to receive his guest. He was a slight, well-built young man, with a face that would catch your eye in a crowd for its bright, keen eye, and the color that almost always burned in the dark cheeks.

"I am not in regulation costume," he said. "I had not time to dress. The boat got here only ten minutes ago."

He wore an easy-fitting suit of dark brown, but his quiet, well-bred manner made it seem all right. He had clear-cut features, but there was a subtle, hidden look in his eyes, and a half-sneer on his short upper lip.

"Let me introduce you to my brother John and give you a seat beside him," said Bert. "He will tell you who is who on the stage. I must go back. I am one of them, you see," and he glanced at his dress. "Don't view us with a critic's eye."

"I am in too mellifluous a mood to be critical," Vane said. "Your mother regaled me on Roman punch as soon as I came."

He was introduced to Dr. John, and had the seat by him. The curtain was up for the garden scene from the "Lady of Lyons."

"You know the lady," asked John, indicating his betrothed.

"I have met her," answered Vane. He was looking at her through his opera-glass. Presently he caught her eye. He smiled to himself as he saw the nervous change in her manner.

The scene over, the programme called next for a song—an aria from some opera. Irma Brazeale came out to sing it in her white, soft dress, with the white flowers on her bosom.

"Who is she?" Vane asked.

"A young teacher of music and French in our family—Miss Aimee Brazeale. A lovely girl."

"Aimee Brazeale!"

Vane leaned eagerly forward, and studied the singer's face. He frowned in a puzzled way, and shook his head. Then he looked again, and the puzzled expression came back, but it passed away, and again he slightly shook his head.

Irma was recalled, and she sang a ballad with such wonderful sweetness that Vane forgot to study her features any more.

"Miss Brazeale sings wonderfully well," he said. "There is a wild sweetness in her notes not often heard."

The curtain rose next on the tableau of the "Troubadour," a graceful picture of a knight and a lady. Then there was the tableau of "Judith and Holofernes." As the calcium lights flashed upon the scene, Vane nearly started to his feet. It was a startling picture. The Judith in her rich, dark robes, and dark, jewelled-bound brow and flowing midnight hair, was wonderful. Then her look, as her eyes were lifted from the bleeding man she had slain for her country's sake! That look expressed stern triumph, but it expressed also a depth of horror at her own deed. The sight of the blood—of the writhing face, had filled her with horror. The Judith was Irma, and that look on her face was a revelation to Vane. He no longer regarded her with a puzzled look. A light of recognition leaped into his eyes.

"It is the Black Bayou girl," he said to himself. "That is her very look after she had stabbed old Solon Vanhorn. Miss Aimee Brazeale, I know you now!"

A note was handed to him from Bert Fontenoy :—

"Can you sing the final duet in 'La Favorita' with Miss Brazeale?—Fernando's part? If you can, your presence behind the scenes is greatly desired."

He rose and followed the messenger. Bert met him.

Pleasant Dreams.

It does not lie in the painter's fancy to imagine a prettier picture than that of a young girl, with lips luscious with the promise of love, half parted in the smiles of happy dreamland. The mind of happy maidenhood is a clear and polished mirror, which, when the wits go wandering into the ghostland of dreams, reflects the impressions of waking hours. If those impressions are pleasant and painless and happy, she will smile in her sleep. If the impressions are those of a suffering woman, tortured with the special ailments to which the feminine organism is liable, the picture is spoiled by the lines of suffering and despondency. Maladies of this nature unfit a woman for joyous maidenhood and for capable motherhood. They incapacitate her to bear the burdens of life in any sphere of action. Household, marital and social duties alike are a burden to the woman who is constantly suffering from headaches, backaches, dragging sensations and weakening drains. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription positively, completely, unfailingly cures troubles of this nature. It imparts health, strength, vigor to the distinctly womanly organs. It fits for carefree, healthy maidenhood, happy wifehood and capable motherhood.

"I have a little step-daughter who had St. Vitus's Dance, which your medicine cured," writes Mrs. T. F. Boze, of Ford, Dinwiddie Co., Va. "I spent about twenty dollars for doctor's bills and medicine, and it did not do the child one cent's worth of good. We commenced giving Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Medical Discovery' and used three bottles of each, which cost only six dollars. Now the child is running around every where and is just as healthy as ever."

ALMOST CAME TO BLOWS.

An Incident Illustrative of Chicago Language and Theatrical Tempers.

The other morning there dropped into the gallery of a photographer who has long made a specialty of taking the pictures of theatrical celebrities a big strapping western man who came to see his friend, the photographer. The young woman behind the counter, who knew the caller, had just been reading in a newspaper a savage "roast" of his native city of Chicago. She handed the paper to the westerner to read, expecting to get some amusement out of his comments. The Chicagoan was in the midst of his reading, bristling with wrath, when the husband of a well known actress entered the room. A framed portrait of the actress, taken several years ago, stood on an easel in a corner. The husband walked up to the picture, and after contemplating it for a few minutes said:

"My wife is certainly a remarkable woman. That picture was taken all of five years ago, yet she is younger looking and handsomer today than it is."

Just then the westerner finished the Chicago story.

"Well, I don't think," he exclaimed loudly and emphatically, throwing the paper down upon the counter.

"What right have you, sir, to think anything about it?" demanded the actress' husband angrily.

"Who gave you control over my thinker?" retorted the astonished westerner.

"Think what you please to yourself, but you shan't insult my wife, sir," shouted the husband.

"Your wife? Where is she? Are you a lunatic?"

"No, sir, but you are a big bully," cried the husband, dancing with wrath.

The little woman behind the counter, who had been convulsed with laughter, tried to explain the mistake, but the indignant husband refused to listen. Nothing but an apology would satisfy him, and he made a dramatic exit from the gallery, saying that the westerner would "hear from him again." He went home and wrote a letter to the police was white silk with silver cord. Pinned to it was a little note :—

"Miss Aimee Brazeale will please accept this dress and wear it to-night. I hope it will fit ; I had her measure.

"Isabel Fontenoy."

Irma never had worn so beautiful a dress. She never had worn one that left bare her beautiful bust and arms as this did but for the filmy lace.

"Do put it on at once!" cried Maddie, running in in her school dress. "To think Belle kept it a secret from me until half an hour ago ; and then I found it out by chance. I thought you would never go to your room. Here are your flowers—all white—roses, jasmine and lilies. Bert gathered them. Now for your dress."

It was put on, and the flowers put in their place. Irma could not help looking at herself with pleasure and blushing at Maddie's enthusiastic exclamations. She meant to wear nothing on her neck, but Maddie, who had been kneeling by the little trunk, brought up a locket set with pearls.

"Oh, not that!" exclaimed Irma, turning pale and suddenly remembering all she wanted to forget. The locket contained a picture of Aimee Brazeale's mother. Irma had never worn it.

"Oh! but she must, must she not, Belle?" appealing to Miss Fontenoy, who had just stopped at the door, peerless in white silk and old lace.

"Let me see it. Why, it will just suit her dress. And this picture—is it not a portrait of your mother? Certainly you will wear it. Let me clasp it on."

There was no demurring when that imperious voice gave command. But Irma felt as though the millstone of the Bible were fastened about her neck. When she was alone, Belle having taken Maddalon off to dress, she flung open the window and gaspingly breathed the fresh air. Dark fears tugged at her brain.

"Leave me, leave me!" she cried to them. "The after days, the sleepless nights, shall be for you and me, but let me have this hour, this night free of your vulture beak!"

She went out on the upper balcony to divert her thoughts by watching the arrivals. It was now dark. The sky was full of stars. The grounds below were illuminated with colored lanterns and large stands of blazing pine and light-wood.

The winding walks, the summer-houses and the glittering fountains looked like fairyland to Irma's eyes.

The people had begun to arrive. They came not only from the town, but from the surrounding country. An entertainment at Live Oaks was an unusual thing, and this, it was rumored, would be something unique.

"Our auditorium will be filled to overflowing," announced Belle, with more excitement than her calm, statuesque face and soft, controlled voice had ever been known to show.

"It will soon be time for the performance to begin. Are all our force here?"

She looked around at those marshaled about her in the brightly lighted upper hall. Irma saw them plainly through the window of the verandah. How fine they were in their stage costumes! How beautiful the girls with their picturesquely dressed hair and glowing complexions! Fannie Gray was among the first who had to appear on the stage. It was in the garden scene of the "Lady of Lyons." Her handsome Claude was carrying her bouquet and fan, and she looked happy. Florence Bellamy, as Desdemona, wore white gauze over silver. Miss Pepton, as Portia, wore gold-colored she had already deceived, and against this young man, who thought her innocent and true. Would he not shrink from her if he knew she was the daughter of an ignorant and unprincipled man—if he should dream that she was the murderess of whom he had read and for whom the police were hunting? If he even knew she was here, an impostor, receiving kindness because of the name and identity she had stolen, he would surely despise her. The thrill of his kiss upon her hand and the beauty of his gift—inscribed with the name of Aimee Brazeale—were mixed and marred with pain ; and yet when she descended to the hall below her color had deepened, and the soft glow in her eyes had brightened so that John Fontenoy was speechless with surprise as he looked at her. He thought he had never seen such strange, bright loveliness. He stood at the foot of the stairs, and took her hand as she came down, saying, as he drew it through his arm :—

"Belle sent me for you. She wants you to come behind the scenes and help her with the stage management, and all that. You know what a task

He rose and followed the messenger. Bert met him.

"Well?" he said.

"I can sing the part," Vane answered. "Introduce me to Miss Brazeale."

Irma sat in the window, talking to a young man. On their way to her they had to pass Miss Gray. Bert presented his friend. The heiress in her long, pink gown swept him a little haughty courtesy.

"I have met Miss Gray before," Vane said, holding out his hand to her. She just touched it.

"A summer acquaintance," she said.

"Merely a summer acquaintance," he answered. "I was one of the summer insects that danced in the light of Miss Gray's smile. Fortunately I got off unscorched."

Irma started up as she heard his voice, and looked towards him. He turned his head and came on to where she was sitting. She knit her fingers together until they were purple in the effort to restrain her emotion. For she knew him. She knew him to be the man she had seen by the flash of lightning on the bank of the bayou—the man whose boat she had taken—the man who knew she had killed Solon Vanhorn, and knew that she had not been drowned.

Her head swam dizzily. Would he know her? His eyes were upon her, but they held no look of recognition. His face gave no sign. They talked of the duet. "Yes," he said, "he thought he could take Fernando's part, though he had not sung it in years. Presently Irma had to chant the Hindoo priestess' prayer in a scene representing the burning of an Indian widow. After which came the casket scene from the "Merchant of Venice"; and then Irma appeared again in some large tableaux. Lastly, she sang the duet with Harold Vane. She sang with a passion and abandon that made even Bert Fontenoy wonder. She inspired Fernando, and he too sang with fervor. A storm of applause showed how well the audience appreciated the duet. Vane quickly gathered up the bouquets and wreaths and led Irma off the stage, seating her in a retired place.

"It was a success," he said, bending close to her. "I wondered at my own audacity, but I got over ground somehow. And you—you were superb; but I wonder they did not give you some of these delicious flowers" (burying his Grecian nose in a mass of fragrant bloom) "when you played 'Judith.' That was your best role to-night—you had played it in real life—Irma Weir."

She looked up at him quickly. Her look was so wild, her face so full of wild terror, that he glanced around in dread lest some one had noticed her. Then he bent over her again.

"Come out with me into the fresh air," he said, 'the grounds are lovely."

He did not wait for her to give her consent. He drew her hand through his arm, folded a mantle around her and led her out by a side exit into the open air. Miss Gray looked after them with a clouding face. They were outside; they were walking along side by side and still he did not speak. She could not speak. At last he said :—

"When is Miss Gray and her cousin to be married?"

"In a few weeks," Irma answered huskily.

"If the Fates do not interfere. 'There's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip,'" he answered. "The Fates have their own way with us sometimes."

"So I feel to-night," she said.

"I appear to you as a kind of fate, I know. You thought I did not know you. I did not until I saw you as 'Judith.' It was your very look—the look you had when——"

"Hush!" she cried. "For God's sake, do not speak of it! But why do I ask it? Of course you will tell! Of course you will betray me to these people—to the police."

He was silent a moment. Then he said :—"One never knows what one will do. A slight circumstance will turn a purpose. We will talk all this over to-morrow. Till then let us not think of it—let us not speak of it."

He began to talk on other subjects. He spoke of the stage.

"You would make a fine tragic actress. Have you never thought of going upon the stage?" he asked Irma.

"No," she said, "I have formed no idea of what I will do with myself. I have not seemed to belong to myself, but to some power outside my own will."

"Tell me how you came here under the name you bear. How came these people to believe you to be——?"

"I will tell you to-morrow when we have our talk. I am all unnerved to-night," she said. "See, everyone has gone. The last carriage has driven away. Let us go in."

would "hear from him again." He went home and wrote a letter to the photographer saying that he had been insulted and threatening to withdraw his wife's custom if the apology was not forthcoming. The photographer was obliged to write several letters before he could calm the troubled waters. Meantime the Chicagoan went home, firm in the conviction that he had narrowly escaped hitting a crazy man.—New York Sun.

THE SECRET OF LONGEVITY.

Nineteen Commandments Which, if Kept, May Insure One Hundred Years.

Sir James Sawyer, a well known physician of Birmingham, England, has been confiding to an audience in that town the secret of longevity. Keep the following 19 commandments, and Sir James sees no reason why you should not live to be 100:

1. Eight hours' sleep.
2. Sleep on your right side.
3. Keep your bedroom window open all night.
4. Have a mat to your bedroom door.
5. Do not have your bedstead against the wall.
6. No cold tub in the morning, but a bath at the temperature of the body.
7. Exercise before breakfast.
8. Eat little meat and see that it is well cooked.
9. (For adults) Drink no milk.
10. Eat plenty of fat to feed the cells which destroy disease germs.
11. Avoid intoxicants, which destroy those cells.
12. Daily exercise in the open air.
13. Allow no pet animals in your living rooms. They are apt to carry about disease germs.
14. Live in the country if you can.
15. Watch the three D's—drinking water, damp and drains.
16. Have change of occupation.
17. Take frequent and short holidays.
18. Limit your ambition.
19. Keep your temper.

Moonshine.

A sailor on one of Uncle Sam's warships writes to a newspaper in his native city as follows:

"Whatever scientists say to the contrary, every sea captain knows that moonlight can twist a man's face out of shape if it shines on him while he sleeps. And that it will spoil food, too, much quicker than sunlight. One might as well tell me that a whale does not know when its trail is crossed, even when it is miles away. Whalers all know that, and if they can't explain it they are just as sure of it as they are that there is a rise and fall of tides.

"Moonlight will sour milk, too, a lot quicker than sunlight, and it will spoil fish or pork quicker too. Townfolk don't believe all this, but most farmers know it.

"Every seafaring man has seen how moonlight acts. Down in the south, where I've been a good deal, they say that if the moon shines on a newborn baby it will have green eyes. They say the same thing in France too."

WHEN GREEK MEETS GREEK.

SPASM I.

It was nine a.m. on Friday, Feb. 25th, Anno Domino 1898, and the editor of the Star sat in his sanctum-sanctorium with a wet cloth on his fevered brow and with his left hand meditatively stroking his whiskers. On his lap rested an 800 page pad of paper and between the thumb and the index finger of his right hand a lead pencil two inches in length, was firmly grasped. A convulsive shudder passed over his frame. His eyes glistened. He grasped the pad and commenced to write rapidly. The editor of the Star had "thinked" a big "thunk" and was putting it on paper so that it might be handed down to posterity through the medium of the Twinkler. He wrote:

"We owe our success in life to our policy of putting 300 pounds of star fertilizer on a 100 pound farm."

"There" muttered the great man, as he lighted a 25 cent cigar, "is another Star's subscription going up in smoke."

He fell into a reverie, from which he was rudely awakened by the entrance of the office boy with the morning's mail.

A hard, steely glitter came into his eyes as his eagle glance skimmed over the columns of his contemporary, The Beaver.

"The milk in the cocoanut" he muttered, and as he read a great transformation took place. His mild air left him, the 800 page pad was hoisted on to the safe and the 2 inch lead pencil was cast contemptuously aside.

The Beaver had cast aspersions on the Star's independence, and boldly stated that the editor had been bought by an order of bone and ash fertilizer. It insinuated that he would turn over several time yet before election day if sufficient inducement was not forthcoming to keep him in his present course. The editor of the Star was warm, and small wonder.

"The vile caitiff," he hissed, "I will smite him in his den." With an angry snort he vanished in the direction of the Beaver office.

SPASM II.

The editor of the Beaver sat in his front office, looking over his favorite exchange, THE EXPRESS, and enjoying himself. He had no fear of impending danger. The hurried entrance of a small man in his coat sleeves disturbed him. The small man was gesticulating wildly and applying words more forcible than pollte to the editor of the Beaver. He was talking fight. He lunged at the Beaver man who parried the assault with his knee. Two employees of the Star appeared upon the scene and sorely against his will they induced the editor of the Star to return to his sanctum.

CONCLUSION.

The editor of the Star showed great valor in bearding the presiding head of the Beaver in his den. The Star man declares that in a large field and with no favor he could pulverize the Beaver man. The editor of the Beaver has long since retired from the fistic arena. People who remember the Beaver man in his school boy days, however, say that if he had let himself loose, (discarded the pen for the sword, so to speak) there would have been only two blows struck, viz: The Beaver man would Hardy and Good Government.

LENNOX REDEEMED

The Government Returned with a Reduced Majority.

PREMIER HARDY.

The campaign is over and the Hardy Government has been sustained with a decreased majority. While the Government held their own fairly well, the Patrons were utterly routed and only one solitary representative, Mr. Tucker, of West Wellington, will face the speaker in the next Legislature. Four years ago seventeen Independents were elected and it was here that the Conservatives secured their strength. Had there been Liberal nominees running against the Conservatives instead of the Patrons the result would have been vastly different. As it is the Liberals gained 12 seats and lost 15, while the Patrons lost 12 seats.

The election on Tuesday has delivered a death blow to Patronism as a political factor. Henceforth the fight will be between the two great parties. J. L. Hayocck, the Patron leader, went under in Frontenac, and Currie is numbered among the slain in West Simcoe.

The Liberals lost two ministers, Col. Gibson, of Hamilton, and the Hon. John Dryden, Minister of Agriculture. On the Conservative side Dr. Willoughby, Dr. Meacham, Mr. Magwood and Sir. John, of pork fame, have been vanquished.

Death of an Aged Resident.

James Lake, an aged and highly respected resident of Napanee, passed the Great Divide on Saturday, after a short illness. Deceased resided with Mr. Wm. Wales and was seventy-four years of age. The funeral took place on Monday to the Napanee cemetery.

Death of Mr. Dingman.

On Sunday Richard Dingman passed away at the residence of his brother, Mr. Manson Dingman, of McDonald. Deceased was 49 years and 11 months of age and was a highly esteemed and respected resident. He was stricken with paralysis at the Bethany tea meeting from which he never recovered. Deceased was unmarried. The funeral took place on Wednesday to the Napanee cemetery and was largely attended.

Better Late than Never.

Dear Editor—Will you convey our thanks to our many customers and friends in town for the help they gave us last year by buying our plants, fruit, vegetables and seeds. Those who bought our seeds last year tell us they are going to come again so come along and see for yourselves before you buy elsewhere. Plants and seeds at the store on the market square or at our greenhouses, Piety Hill. Floral designs a specialty. And if you want Nursery Stock give me a call in good time. I will guarantee good stock. Yours truly,

GEO. LLOYD, Florist,

Very Yellow.

The Napanee hockey club journeyed to Kingston on Saturday to play a game presumably, with the Rockwoods. The aggregation they ran up against was a combination of Queen's, Frontenac's and Rockwoods. It wasn't a hockey match. The Kingston men were trying how hard they could slug the Napanee team without committing manslaughter. At half time a number of the supporters of the Napanee team advised them to leave the ice, but they played on to the end. A yellower aggregation than the team that was pitted against Napanee on Saturday night happily does not exist in Canada. Not content with slugging the members of the team the Kingston men went so far as to assault the Napanee time-keeper and the goal umpire. The score was given out as 11 to 1 in favor of Kingston. Napanee defeated the Rockwoods 6 to 0 in Napanee.

Live Hogs vs. Dressed.

The following is taken from the Walkerton Telescope and will be of interest to those who have hogs for sale: A question much debated among the farmers at present, is whether it is more profitable to sell their hogs by live weight or to kill and dress them before selling. An item in last week's Herald says that Mr. R. Johnston of Brant, by killing his own hogs made $1,09 on each hog. The truth of this statement has been called in question, and here are a few examples which would seem to show that it is more profitable to sell the hogs by live weight. John McLean had six hogs which weighed 1565 lbs, live weight. They were good ones and he was offered $4.60 per cwt. for them. This would have netted him $71.69. He declined the offer and killed them himself. When dressed they weighed 1189 pounds. He sold the pork for 6c a lb., receiving $71.34, so that, had he sold them by live weight he would have been 65 cents ahead, besides saving the expense of killing. D. C. Wilson had four hogs, which weighed, live weight, 550 lbs. He was offered and accepted $4.50 per cwt. for them, amounting to $24.85. These hogs when dressed weighed 408 lbs, which would amount to $24.48, so that by selling live weight, Mr. Wilson was just 27 cents ahead. Richard Sutton had six hogs, weighing, live weight, 1075 lbs. He was offered $48.82 for them. He decided to do his own butchering. These hogs, when dressed, weighed 836 pounds, and he received for his pork $50.16, or $1.34 more than he would have received had he sold by live weight. Thus we see that out of three examples, Sutton was the only one who made anything by doing his own butchering, and even he only received 24 cents a hog for his labor. As figures don't lie, it would seem pretty evident that it pays farmers better to sell their hogs on foot than to butcher them.

Wedding Bells.

A happy event took place at the residence of Mr. Sanford Brown, South Fredericksburgh on Wednesday evening, when his eldest daughter, Miss Bertha M., was united in wedlock to Mr. Wm. Stratton, of Melita, Manitoba. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. A. L. Adam, of Adolphustown, at 8 o'clock p.m. in the presence of a few intimate friends of both the contracting parties. Miss M. Griffith, of Napanee, acted as bridesmaid, while Dr. N. G. Sills, of Napanee, acted as best man. The groom is a former resident of this county, removing to Manitoba some few years ago, where he has amassed considerable wealth. It was a fitting climax that he should come back to marry his old sweetheart. Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. T. N. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. D. L. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. R. Cadman, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Stratton, Mr. and Mrs. P. D. Griffith, Mr. and Mrs. Monloy Whyte, and Mr. Robert L. Henry. The bride was the receipitant of many handsome wedding presents. The happy couple left on Thursday for their home in Manitoba, taking with them the good wishes of their many friends for their future happiness. The bride's sister accompanied her.

The Napanee Bicycle Works.

While down street recently, our attention was drawn to the very neatly arranged show windows of Napanee's principal dealer in Bicycles, Mr. W. J. Normile. On going in to have a chat about the prospects of the trade for the coming season, we were surprised at the display of bicycles on hand. Along the western side of the show room are a large number of wheels that for style and quality could not be excelled in the large cities. Mr. Normile was nothing loth to talk and answered numerous questions very courteously. Being asked to point out the improvements on the '98 bicycles, he directed our attention to the Massey-Harris Lady's, Model C, the highest of all high grade wheels. This wheel is much admired, has a large sale, and pleased thousands of fair riders. The next was the Gent's Model, No. 3, the new features being the dropping of the crank bracket, the triple crown, and the new inverted bearings and numerous other improvements that will add to the beauty and efficiency of this excellent standard wheel. Mr. Normile is also agent for the celebrated Crescent Bicycles manufactured by the Western Wheel Works, of Chicago, the largest bicycle manufacturers in the world, having a capacity of 700 wheels a day. A full line o these wheels are kept in stock and comprize the following lines: gent's, lady's children's and tandems, also the chainless gear and racers. The Crescents are known as the popular wheels at standard prices, and judging from the appearance of the wheels, we predict a large sale in '98. An immense line of sundries is carried, as a look around convinced us. Anything and everything for any make of wheels kept in stock at rock bottom prices. The repairing department is complete in every particular, Mr. Normile having, it might be said, grown up in the bicycle trade and his long experience will enable him to do work second to none. The Bicycle Livery will be continued on a much larger scale than heretofore and will be all '98 model machines and always kept in first class running order. Wheels for children will be kept for hire at reasonable rates. Mr. Normile has also in connection with his establishment a riding school indoors. With a large riding floor space, parties will be able to secure lessons at any time. In short, Mr. Normile has the most complete establishment of its kind and we would advise intending purchasers to call and see him in the Mills Block, sign of the Golden Wheel.

The Loyal True Blues, of Picton, will start an Orphan's Home.

BOWEN E. AYLSWORTH.

Election day passed off quietly in Lennox, but both sides worked hard to get out the vote. In Napanee the big Liberal majority of 41 was a boomerang for the Conservatives, and when the result was announced, Mr. Aylsworth's election was conceded by all.

In the evening the returns were announced by a joint committee of Reformers and Conservatives, from the Beaver office Dundas street was lined with a surging mass of spectators, who held their position until well nigh 11 o'clock p.m. The returns were bulletined by means of a stereopticon, manipulated by Archie Clarke, on a cloth stretched across the window of the Beaver office. Between the returns the interest of the crowd was sustained by several comical views, and at stated intervals the operators rang in a line intimating that they were somewhat dry. At this several choice spirits in the crowd commenced singing that favorite melody, "How dry we are, etc. It was a good natured crowd, and seemed to enjoy themselves immensely.

At the Reform committee rooms Bowen E. Aylsworth, M. P. P., held a levee from 8 p.m. until 10.30 p m., where he received the hearty congratulations of his friends on his magnificent victory. Mr. Aylsworth is proud of Napanee and announced that if ever he made up his mind to leave Bath he would certainly take up his residence in Napanee.

DR. MEACHAM.

At the Conservative committee rooms a number of the faithful party workers congregated and about 8 p.m. they were joined by Dr. Meacham. They consoled one another with the reflection that if they had lost Lennox they made substantial gains in other parts of the Province.

The following is a complete return of the result of the polling in Lennox on Tuesday.

IN ADDINGTON.

The result in Addington is still in doubt, but Reid's election, by a small majority, is conceded. Owing to the difficulty of securing accurate returns from the back of the county we have decided to hold over the result of the polling in this riding until next week, when it will be given in full.

An unconfirmed dispatch from Cornwall states that J. McLaughlin the newly elected M.P.P. for Stormont dropped dead on Wednesday last from heart failure.

A Total Surprise.

On Wednesday evening between thirty and forty of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Fralick's near relatives and friends, including Miss Dalton, of Belleville, and Mr. Laidley, of Odessa, surprised them greatly by walking in with full baskets of everything that could be desired to satisfy the apetites, and Master Blake Fralick bringing up the rear with a large sack of pop corn on his shoulder. An enjoyable evening was spent with games and music, until the small wee hours. It being Mrs. Fralick's birthday she received a number of very nice presents.

Her First Appearance.

Mr. H. H. Allison, of Adolphustown, informs us that Madame Albina, the famous cantatrice, made her first appearance in public as a singer at an entertainment held in the Adolphustown school house a goodly number of years ago. She was quite a little girl then, and accompanied the Rev. Manly Benson from Prince Edward County expressly to sing at the entertainment. The celebrated prima donna, who has since won the plaudits of the world, was introduced to that Adolphustown audience as little Miss Lazier.

OBITUARY.

Bertha Ellen Harten, daughter of the late Henry D. Harten, was born on the 6th concession of Camden, Feb. 3rd 1862, and died at the old home Feb 5th, 1898. She was soundly converted to God about twelve years ago under the preaching of the now sainted Rev. Jas. Curts who was at that time stationed at Newburgh. She immediately united with the Methodist church, remaining a devoted consistent member of the same until her death. Her last sickness was such that she wasted away for slowly rolling weeks, but never did she murmur or complain but with patient forbearance and well doing waited for glory, immortality eternal life. Her favorite hymn No. 50 in the hymnal was frequently sung at her request, Oh safe to the rock that is higher than I." Her sweet trustful disposition and loving christian experience was brought out by the chorus of this hymn. "Hiding in Thee, Thou blest Rock of Ages I'm hiding in Thee." During the last hours while anxious to go away and be at rest, she seemed to enjoy a holy communion with her dear departed and once was heard to say "Come mother and help me across the river." Dear sweet sister she left the world without a tear, save for the friends she held so dear. Her funeral was very large and respectable. Her pastor the Rev. J. S. McMullen improved the occasion by preaching from 23rd Psalm 4th verse. The remains were placed in the Centreville vault.

EIGHTY UNFORTUNATES.

Is the Estimated Proportion in every Hundred People in this Climate Effected with that Dread Disease Catarrh—How easily the Proportion Would be Reversed if Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder was Universally Used—It Relieves in 10 Minutes.

"Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder benefitted me at once, and it's so easy to apply," says Rev. W. H. Main, of Emmanuel Baptist church, Buffalo. Thousands more in professional, and in the humbler callings of life, could say Amen to this statement. Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder gives relief in from 10 to 60 minutes in most acute cases. Now is the season of severe weather changes, and now is the season when disease germs develop. That slight sneezing cold in the head may mean that the seeds of chronic catarrh have been sown. The tested cure is the safest and quickest.

A careless mason dropped a brick from the second story of a building on which he was at work says an exchange. Leaning over the wall and glancing downward, he discovered a respectable citizen with his silk hat jammed over his eyes, rising from a recumbent posture. The mason in tones of apprehension inquired, "Did that brick hit anyone down there?" The citizen, with great difficulty extricating himself from the extinguisher into which his hat had been converted, replied, with considerable wrath. "Yes sir, it did hit me." "That's right," exclaimed the mason in tones of admiration, "noble man, I would rather have wasted a thousand bricks than have you tell me a lie about it."

Mr. John W. Cheetham, who leaves for Chicago this week, where he has secured a lucrative position, was waited upon at the Paisley House on Wednesday evening by a number of his friends, who presented him with a handsome gold locket and a highly eulogistic address. After the presentation a pleasant evening was spent, and all joined in wishing "Jack," health, joy and prosperity in his new home.

A pretty wedding was solemnized at the Presbyterian Manse, Tamworth, on Wednesday, when Rev. Ballantyne united in the the holy bonds of matrimony J. H. Huggeison, of Chippewa, to Miss Mable E. Barton, of Sheffield. After the marriage ceremony the party, about 10 in number, repaired to the residence of J. W. Frair, where a sumptious repast was prepared. They were serenaded for about half an hour by the Tamworth brass band after which the happy couple went on their way rejoicing.

At a recent women's meeting in New York after a number of delegates had made earnest addresses, a little woman in the rear of the hall arose, and, addressing the chair, said: "Madame President, I am tired of so many squeaky sopranos; I want to hear a man." The little woman voiced the soul hunger of the sex. They may meet and harangue and resolve, but when wearied with the burden of regulating the universe—and their duds—they "want to hear a man!"

Apt Quotation.

There is sometimes more wit in the application to the business in hand of words already chosen for another purpose than in the invention of an appropriate phrase. Bishop Whipple, according to The Church News, loved to tell this story:

A devout colored preacher, whose heart was aglow with missionary zeal, gave notice to his congregation that in the evening an offertory would be taken for missions and asked for liberal gifts. A selfish, well to do man in his congregation said to him before the service:

"Yer gwine to kill dis church ef yer goes on saying give, give. No church can stan it. Yer gwine to kill it."

After the sermon the colored minister said to the people:

"Brother Jones told me I was gwine to kill dis here church ef I kep' a-askin yer to give, but, my brethren, churches doesn't die dat way. Ef anybody knows of a church dat died 'cause it's be givin too much to de Lord, I'll be very much obliged of my brother will tell whar dat church is, for I'zo gwine visit it, and I'll climb on de walls dat church, under de light of de sun and cry, 'Blessed am de dead dat die de Lord.'"

FIGURES OF SPEECH.

While aunty was reading a story one night,
To good little Oliver's smiling delight,
She came upon something remarkably queer
That good little Oliver wondered to hear.

And this was the something she placidly read:
"Jane Ann then determined to enter the shed,
And, cautiously dropping her eyes on the floor,
They fell on the snake which had caught them before."

Interruption was rude, the dear child had been taught,
So he said not a word, but he thought, and he thought,
And the longer he pondered the stranger it grew—
The thing that Jane Ann was reported to do.

He felt of his eyes with mysterious doubt
And wondered how she could have taken hers out;
And how—this was really what puzzled him more—
They could fall on a thing which had caught them before.

—Mary E. Bradley in St. Nicholas.

NAPANEE MILLS.

A sad death occurred here on Sunday morning. A young man, Patrick Ellis by name, employed at the cement works, contracted a cold a week ago which soon developed into pneumonia. A nurse from Kingston Hospital was in attendance, also the best medical skill. Notwithstanding all this care he breathed his last Sunday morning, one week from the day he was taken ill. The funeral took place Monday at Centreville Roman Catholic Church.

Easily Enough.

Here is a Sioux City (Ia.) Sunday school story:

They were studying in the catechism about the wonderful greatness and power of God. "Can God do everything?" asked the teacher. It was generally admitted that he could. Then the teacher rather mischievously propounded a stickler perhaps as a test of faith. "Could God make two and two equal five?" he asked. The query rather startled the little girls in the class, and their faces took on a worried, puzzled expression. They had never thought of such a thing as that, and it looked as if their faith was wavering. The teacher waited with a rather amused smile on his face. Then up shot a little hand. "Well," asked the teacher, "what do you think about it?" "Yes, sir, he can," was the prompt and certain response. Now it was the teacher's turn to look surprised. "Well, how can God make two and two equal five?" "By adding one," was the triumphant answer, and the mischievous teacher couldn't dispute it.—Sioux City Journal.

How Senator Vest Obtained His Desk.

Many good stories could be told of the alertness which senators display in securing well placed desks, but the experience of Mr. Vest is especially worth relating. When in 1883 the civil service law was being discussed, Mr. Pendleton, an Ohio Democrat, and Mr. Dawes had presented bills. By a shrewd bit of politics the Republicans abandoned their support of the Dawes bill and voted for Mr. Pendleton's measure, their votes, together with the votes of the Democrats favorable to the measure, being sufficient to pass it. As the bill was about to be voted on Mr. Cockrell moved that its title be changed so as to read, "A bill to retain Republicans in office." As soon as it passed, Mr. Vest filed a claim for Mr. Pendleton's seat. "The author of such a bill," said he, "will never come back to the senate."

Mr. Vest was right, and at the beginning of the next congress he moved into Mr. Pendleton's vacant chair.—Washington Post.

Liverpool and the Slave Trade.

The great wealth of the merchants of London and Bristol enabled them to enjoy a monopoly of the African slave trade for a long period, but the Liverpool merchants were not long behind their rivals in the race, and participated largely in the profits of the African trade. It is not to be supposed that they altered their conduct in consequence of the change in their circumstances. Slaves continued to be shipped to the West Indies for more than a year after the passing of the act, subject to terrible dangers unknown to any other description of trading adventures. By a shrewd bit of politics the Republicans abandoned their support of the Dawes bill and voted for Mr. Pendleton's measure, their votes, together with the votes of the Democrats favorable to the measure, being sufficient to pass it. As the bill was about to be voted on Mr. Cockrell moved that its title be changed so as to read, "A bill to retain Republicans in office." As soon as it passed, Mr. Vest filed a claim for Mr. Pendleton's seat. "The author of such a bill," said he, "will never come back to the senate."

Mr. Vest was right, and at the beginning of the next congress he moved into Mr. Pendleton's vacant chair.—Washington Post.

Liverpool and the Slave Trade.

The great wealth of the merchants of London and Bristol enabled them to enjoy a practical monopoly of the African slave trade for a long period prior to Liverpool having any share in it. Liverpool adventurers with a small capital were unable to equip vessels and purchase goods specially adapted to the African market and of no use outside of that market, nor could they afford to await the uncertain results of round voyages, sometimes prolonged to more than a year and subject to terrible dangers unknown to any other description of trading adventures. Early in the eighteenth century, however, a change [illegible]

A RELIABLE OFFER.

HONEST HELP FREE TO MEN.

The Napanee Express is authorized to state by Mr. D. Graham, Box 133, Hagersville, Ont, that any man who is nervous or debilitated or who is suffering from any of the various troubles resulting from overwork, excesses, or abuse, such as nervous debility, exhausted vitality, lost vigor, unnatural drains, and losses, lack of development, etc., can write to him in strict confidence and receive free of charge full instructions how to be thoroughly cured.

Mr. Graham himself was for a long time a sufferer from above troubles and after trying in vain many advertised remedies, electric belts, etc., became almost entirely discouraged and hopeless. Finally he confided in an old clergyman, whose kind and honest advice enabled him to speedily obtain a perfect and permanent cure. Knowing to his own sorrow, that so many poor sufferers are being imposed upon by unscrupulous quacks, Mr. Graham considers it his duty as an honest man and a firm believer in christian sympathy and kindness, to give his fellow-men the benefit of his experience and assist them to a cure. Having nothing to sell, he asks for no money, the proud satisfaction of having done a great service to one in need, he rightly considers an ample reward for his trouble. If you write to Mr. Graham you can rely upon being cured and upon absolute secrecy as well.

Address as above, enclosing a stamp, and name to the Napanee Express. No attention however, will be paid to those writing out of mere curiosity, therefore state that you really need a cure.

Spring Housecleaning. While people are particular about having their house cleaned of the winter's accumulation of dirt, they're not always so particular about their system. It needs cleansing too, and there's nothing will do it so thoroughly and effectually as Burdock Blood Bitters. Alex. Miller, Ardoch, Ont., says:—"I have taken B.B.B. every spring for some years and as a blood purifier it is unequalled."

How It Happened.

"Look here, young man," said the druggist.

The clerk did not have to be told that he had made a mistake. He knew it long before. Indeed he had figured it out for himself and was able to tell just how it happened.

"You have charged only 75 cents for this prescription," asserted the druggist, "and the regular price is $1."

"I admit it," said the clerk. "The fact is I was rattled. You see, I made a hasty calculation as to the cost of the ingredients, and the result was 3 cents instead of 4 as it should have been. That is how it happened."—Chicago

Paris as a Financial Center.

That Paris is and has for two centuries been by far the greatest intellectual center in the world is, of course, true, but she is a great money center also. She has the power of the purse. She contains the ministry of finance and the Bank of France, and she consequently wields a supreme power in France quite apart from the fact that she is the greatest artistic and literary center in the world, and that politically she often stands out as the representative of all France, as she did in 1793, in 1830, in 1848 and in 1870. Take from Paris the power of the purse, transfer the Bank of France and the haute finance to Lyons or Toulouse, and we should find (if the transference could be made permanent) that Paris had declined greatly in the esteem of France and of the world.

While Paris is a grade below London in its power as a financial center, Berlin is perhaps a grade below Paris, not because it is not a very influential center of finance, but because it shares that position with Frankfort, which still, though no longer a capital, maintains its old reputation, and will probably continue to do so.—London Spectator.

FIRE HORSES.

The Quickest Ones In the World Are Said to Be In Kansas City.

F. S. Dellenbaugh writes of "The Quick Horse" in St. Nicholas, his article telling of the training of horses for the fire department. Mr. Dellenbaugh says:

The quickest horses in the world were at one time in Kansas City at the headquarters of its fire department, directly under the office of the chief, Mr. George C Hale. To Mr. Hale's genius more than to any other factor the quick horse owed his first development, for Mr. Hale is the inventor of the earliest swinging harness which made the quick horse possible. When Mr. Henry M. Stanley and his wife were in this country, they witnessed an exhibition drill of the Kansas City fire department. The drill so impressed the visitors that an account of it was published in a London journal, and this English article brought an invitation to Mr. Hale to visit England as the representative of the American fire service at the international fire tournament. Mr. Hale and a picked corps went to England, taking with them the remarkably quick horses Joe and Dan, and they became world famous. As the quickest harnessing time of the London fire brigade is 1 minute 17½ seconds and the Kansas City horses were harnessed in 1¾ seconds and were out of the engine house in less than 8 seconds, there could be no competition. In Kansas City four fine bays were harnessed to the hook and ladder truck almost as quickly as even Joe and Dan could jump into their harnesses. It was a pretty sight to see these four well kept horses spring to their places at the stroke of the gong and in two or three seconds stand ready to run with the apparatus. Joe was killed by an accident, but Dan, with a new mate, is still in service, and as quick as ever.

The record for quickest time from the engine house to the throwing of water on the fire is held by a Kansas City company. In this instance the horses were harnessed, a run of 2,194 feet (a little less than half a mile) was made, and water thrown from the hose in the wonderfully brief time of 1 minute 31½ seconds.

more than a year and subject to terrible dangers unknown to any other description of trading adventures. Early in the eighteenth century, however, a successful rivalship with Bristol in exporting provisions and coarse checks and silk handkerchiefs of Manchester make to the West Indies and the continent of America eventually enabled the merchants of Liverpool to participate in the more lucrative slave traffic.

While Liverpool obtained from this competition a sudden accession to her commerce which filled her warehouses with sugar, rum and other West India produce, the trade of Bristol to the West Indies declined. The checks of Manchester, carried in Liverpool ships, ousted from that market the German, French and Scotch osnaburgs exported from Bristol.—"History of the Liverpool Privateers, Etc," Gomer Williams.

THE EXPERIENCE OF MISS FLORA FERGUSON OF SYDNEY, N. S.

For Five Years She Was an Almost Helpless Invalid—Used Many Medicines Without Benefit—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Restore Her Health.

From the Sidney, N. S., Reporter.

Many of our Cape Breton readers, especially those residing in Sydney and vicinity, will remember the subject of this article, and also knew Miss Ferguson when residing at her home on Hardwood Hill, just on the borders of the town. From 1890 to 1895 sickness preyed upon Miss Ferguson, and from a bright and healthy girl she became an invalid, completely given up to weakness and despondency. In the spring of 1895 she left her home and went to the States, where she has a sister and other friends, thinking that a change of climate might benefit her. While there she was attended by medical men, but without any improvement, in fact she gradually grew worse, until she used to spend the greater part of every day on the lounge at her sister's. Friends came to see her, only to go away with the sympathetic remark, "Poor Flora, she is not long for this world. From the beginning of her sickness up to the time when the first box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills was taken, she had tried upwards of twenty different kinds of medicine—some from doctors and some of the many patent drugs for sale at druggists. Hearing from a friend of the value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, Miss Ferguson resolved to give them a trial, and requested her sister to get her a box. Following the directions carefully, she began taking them. As day by day went by she began to get better and her spirits to return, and in the course of a few weeks she walked a mile to the post office and home again. Miss Ferguson continued taking the pills until she had used eight boxes, when she was completely restored to health and happiness. She was again strong and healthy. While ill she had greatly run down in weight and at the time she began using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, was reduced to 102 pounds, and when she had completed the eighth box her weight had increased to 141 pounds. Only one month ago she called at the home of the editor of this paper to leave her address to have the Reporter forwarded to her at Arlington, Mass. During the moment's conversation with her the above facts were told to Mr. W. A. Richardson, the editor, and with beaming countenance Miss Ferguson willingly agreed to have him tell the people "how Dr. Williams' Pink Pills brought her from the gates of death to the enjoyments of health." He was astonished, as being well acquainted with her while in Sidney, knowing how ill she was and seeing her a physically changed person, was enough to cause anyone to be amazed at the change.

The above facts can be verified by writing Miss Ferguson, at No. 16 Henderson street, Arlington, Mass.; the editor of the Island Reporter, Sydney, C. B., or any one of the intimate friends of Miss Fergoson, Hardwood Hill, Sydney.

WELL KNOWN VIOLINIST

Traveled Extensively Throughout the Provinces—Interesting Statements Concerning His Experience.

STELLARTON, N.S.—James R. Murray, a well known violinist, of this place, who has traveled extensively throughout the Provinces, makes this statement:

"I was running down in health and my weight fell off from 175 to 150 pounds. Prescriptions did me but little good. My trouble was called nervous dyspepsia. I resorted to Hood's Sarsaparilla and after taking five bottles I was greatly benefited. I feel as well now as ever in my life, and have increased in flesh so that I now weigh 177 pounds. I am well known in this part of the country, having followed my profession, that of a violin musician for the last 26 years. I gladly tell my friends what Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for me. Before I began taking the medicine I did not have any ambition, but now all is changed and my dyspeptic trouble perfectly cured." JAMES R. MURRAY.

side of the Maine, as soon as such an examination is possible, as also of the bottom, where the vessel rests, will prove that the explosion was undoubtedly due to some interior cause."

On the whole there does not seem to be much in the Maine incident on which to go to war, especially as the United States commissioners frankly state that they have been unable to obtain evidence fixing the responsibility for the destruction of the vessel on any person or persons.—Toronto Star.

A SEEMING DISCREPANCY.

The Dear Lady Has Her Daughter's Interest at Stake.

She is a lady whose husband has accumulated a large share of this world's goods. She does not care how much anything costs and desires people to know that she doesn't care. So it was not through any fear that she was not getting her money's worth that she reproved her youngest daughter, who had been practicing at the piano. The little girl's efforts had been harrowingly persistent and dutiful, and she was hurt as well as surprised when her mother indignantly remarked:

"Dolly, I am compelled to remind you that we have employed the best teacher in the city for your musical education and that as we propose to spare no expense in the future you ought to be more conscientious in laying a foundation. You will gain nothing by slighting the work now. I am determined that you shall learn to play the piano no matter what it costs."

"I was practicing faithfully," the pupil protested.

"My dear, do not attempt to deceive your mother."

"But you heard me practicing, didn't you?"

"It may be," was the chilly rejoinder, "that your mother's advantages in early life were not so great as those I intend that you shall enjoy. But there is one study in which I was always good, and it will be useless for you to attempt to mislead me in anything connected with it. That is arithmetic."

"I never said you weren't splendid in arithmetic, but that hasn't anything to do with my piano playing."

"Unless my eyes are at fault those are five finger exercises that you are now supposed to be working on."

"Yes."

"Very well. Do not think that I forget myself so far as to speak in anger. But I should very much like to know what you mean by trying to play five finger exercises with both hands."—Detroit Free Press.

NAPANEE, FRIDAY, APRIL 22nd 1898

It must be galling to Spain to be told to evacuate the continent she discovered a few hundred years ago.

With Britain extending the glad hand the United States feels much like the small boy facing a foe in the presence of his big brother.

It is taking the United States and Spain a long time to adjust the preliminaries. The European authorities may step in and prevent the fight.

N. Clarke Wallace, Billy McLean and the perambulating phonograph from Pile O Bones are inclined to be a law unto themselves. They will not have Tupper to rule over them.

The man whose history "is the history of Canada" is not making history these days. He has his hands full keeping the recalcitrant members of the Conservative party in check.

If Nicholas Flood Davin had been born a mute it would have saved this long suffering country many hundreds of dollars. Somebody should take him out on the prairie and lose him.

The good showing of the Liberals left the Opposition little room for criticism of the budget and the debate was consequently of short duration. There is no necessity for long dissertations to convince the people that they are prosperous—they can feel it.

carry on the farming operations in the very best way. Many farmers are working their farms along unprofitable lines just because they have not been able to borrow a few hundred dollars at a rate of interest that would enable them to have a little profit out of the transaction. If the action of the government in reducing the rate of interest will tend to bring about cheaper money, no class should profit as much by it as the farmer. If he were placed in a position so that he could borrow a few hundred dollars at any time at a rate of about four or five per cent, the average Canadian farmer would soon better his condition."

Mr. McMillan, M. P., of Huron, the clear-headed Scotchman, who delivered an address at the Farmers' Institute meeting here last fall, speaking in the house last week attributed the great prosperity now enjoyed by the farmers of Ontario to the policy of the government and the action of the Minister of Agriculture in going to Washington and securing the removal of the quarantine on cattle. Owing to that last year from 30,000 to 50,000 head of young cattle had gone into the United States, and had brought from $7 to $8 more than in the previous year, and these were of a class which it was not desirable for the farmers to feed here. We sold 518,000 cattle in 1897, 66,000 more than in the previous year, and 200,000 of these were increased in price by $8 per head, and this $1,600,000 went into the pockets of the farmers. Cold storage has been another boon to the farmers which had resulted in the export of butter to England in good condition, and one large shipment had secured higher prices in the English market than the best Danish butter. The placing of corn on the free list was, he said, the greatest benefit ever conferred on the farmers of Canada, especially those of Ontario. The member for South Huron deduced some exceedingy interesting figures in support of this proposition. Accepting the statement which had been made that $11,500,000 bushels of corn came into Canada in the last six months of the last financial year, and had displaced an equal amount of our coarse grains, he pointed out that when corn, peas and oats were fed to cattle, pound for pound, corn was the best, and to equal the $11,500,000 bushels of corn would take 18,941,176 bushels of oats. With corn at 37½ cts per bushel and oats at 24 cents, and taking these equivalent quantities of corn and oats, the gain to the farmer in buying corn and selling oats would be $1,440,882. "That" he added, "is the way I want to see the Canadian farmers ruined all the time when they can get such sums of money put into their pockets." The reduction of duty and the easing of the customs rulings on agricultural implements was also commended as a benefit to the farming community. A great deal of confidence, he said, had been inspired in the minds of farmers and manufacturers by the tariff adopted last session. Mr. McMillan stated to the house that he had been told by a Conservative that he should put a question on the paper asking the Government if they were going to abolish or remodel the Senate, so as to make it respousible to the people of Canada. An irresponsible body ruling in a Democratic country was an anomaly in legislation, While he was an out-and-out free trader, Mr. McMillan said that he had ever held that it was the duty of the Government in remodelling the tariff to make changes slowly and gradually, that industrial interests might not be injured. If the Government went on for ten years at the same rate as they had been going since they came into power, the last vestige of protection would be buried in the dust, but it would be done in a manner that would not injure any interest.

pened, but even at this stage it is interesting to sum up the two theories that have been published by the two Governments respectively to account for it.

Each of them appointed a commission to enquire into the facts of the case, so far as they might prove to be ascertainable. Quite naturally there was a regrettable want of coincidence in the scope of the inquiry. The Spanish Government offered to co-operate with the United States Government in one investigation, and this would have been more effective than two separate inquests. The Spanish Commissioners were hampered in their work by the fact that the wreck of the Maine, until it was formally abandoned by the United States Government, was in international law, part of United States territory. The United States commissioners, either voluntarily, or in accordance with instructions, seem to have restricted their inquiry to the condition of the vessel before and after the fatality. Now that the Maine has been abandoned without being further destroyed by dynamite, unless war causes the catastrophe to sink into comparative insignificance, the Spanish Government may yet be able to throw important light on what is so far obscure and mysterious.

The reports of the two commissions are not merely non-coincident, but contradictory. The United States commissioners say "there were two explosions of a totally different character with a very short but distinct interval between them; the first was more in the nature of a report, like that of a gun, while the second was more open, prolonged, and of greater volume." In the opinion of the commissioners the second report was caused by the partial explosion of two or more of the Maine's magazines, the first being due to the explosion of a mine under the bottom of the ship. The Spanish commissioners report that only one explosion occurred, and as there was certainly one within the ship, the conflict of testimony on this point is all important.

The Spanish commissioners call attention to other matters that are negatively of the utmost consequence. One of these is the absence of any heaved-up columns of water, such as an external explosion of great force would certainly have caused. Another is the absence of any perceptible shock to the nearest vessel, and of vibration on the adjoining part of the shore. A third is the absence of dead fish, though fish are abundant in the harbor. These are points of very great interest, that will not be ignored by independent and disinterested experts when they come to sift these two historical documents.

There is an equally sharp conflict between the two commissions in their respective inferences based on the state of the sunken vessel's hull. The United States commissioners argue that the position of the keel and the shape of the bottom plating show the first explosion to have been external, while the position of the decks shows the second to have been internal: and they express their belief that the disaster was due to a submarine mine, the explosion of which caused the subsequent explosion of two or more of the vessel's forward magazines. The Spanish commissioners report that "a minute examination of the bottom of the harbor around the vessel shows absolutely no sign of the action of a torpedo," and affirm their belief that "an examination of the inside and out-

Passenger Coaches More Expensive Than Many Fine Houses.

"Ninety-five per cent of the traveling public do not own in their own right or occupy through rental a dwelling house which, including all its contents, costs as much as one of the ordinary modern passenger cars run on any first class railroad."

The foregoing statement, which is calculated to arouse the incredulity of the average individual, was made recently by George J. Charlton, assistant general passenger and ticket agent of the Chicago and Alton railroad.

"Just let me give you a few facts to prove that assertion," continued Mr. Charlton. "The cost of the average passenger car today is from $6,000 to $7,000. A reclining chair car costs from $10,000 to $12,000. These figures represent the bare cost of the car. When you add to that from year to year the expenses of maintenance, instead of figuring, as the ordinary business mortal will figure, a return in interest for the capital invested you simply aggravate the situation.

"I once heard a prominent master car builder say that it cost $500 to simply look over a car after it had served five or six months on the road and had been sent to the carshops to be examined and put into presentable shape for another six months' run. He meant that the ordinary 'dressing down' and cleaning of a car would cost over $500, and if you extend your investigation to general shop repairs—perhaps adding a little upholstering here and there—you could easily get away with another $500."—Kansas City Journal.

The Trees of Paris.

Paris is probably the only city in the world which has trees that bloom twice a year habitually. These are the horse chestnuts. There are 17,000 of them planted in the squares and along the boulevards, and 26,000 buttonwoods. The trees in Paris are numbered, just like the people, the cabs, the animals, the lampposts and the matches. These horse chestnuts have only been doing this trick for about five years, and only some of them have made a practice of it. These die, or apparently die, in the latter part of July, and all the leaves fall off. A month or so afterward they all come out into flower again and little green leaves shoot forth continually until they are nipped by the first frost. There is a reason for this, and the scientists worked over the matter for a long time to be able to explain it. Briefly and unscientifically the trees lose their leaves because they are attacked by a little fungus which is blown upon them by the wind; then, being still full of sap, they start to put forth leaves all over again.

Overheard In a Lunchroom.

In a popular restaurant where the waiter girls are all pretty a young man sat down to his humble lunch. He watched the pretty attendant attentively, and it was apparent that he admired her very much.

"Do you wish anything for dessert?" the young woman inquired as he had nearly finished his repast.

"No, thank you," said he. "It's dessert enough for me to have the privilege of looking at the waiter."

Her nose assumed an elevation of 45 degrees as with an indignant sniff she pranced away. Two minutes afterward she had told all the girls about the lovely fellow who never ordered dessert, and it was easy to see that she was tickled to death.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

In the Same Boat.

"I would like to know your intentions, sir," said the old man to the youth who had been calling on his daughter with great regularity for a long time.

"Same here," replied the young man promptly. "I'd like to know yours."—

BING.

He was a man well known in town, and people called him Bing.
He could tell another person how to do most anything,
And, strange as it may seem to you, for none of his advice
Would he exact of friend or foe even the smallest price.

And though he never owned a house he could another show
Just where the rafters and ridgepole ought properly to go,
And though in naught he ever tried was he a great success.
He always thought that his advice was far from valueless.

He could tell another person just when to buy and sell,
And if they followed his advice he knew they would do well,
And though to aid somebody else he often used to yearn
When e'er he acted for himself things took a losing turn.

He could tell a big contractor just how to dig a ditch
And could map out for a merchant the sure way to get rich,
He knew just when a man should sleep and when a girl should wed,
And yet he scarce had brains enough to earn his daily bread.

He could tell a railroad magnate how best to build his road,
And the way to run a paper an editor has showed,
And as to give a doctor points one day he kindly tried
He suddenly fell sick himself and very shortly died.

IN A QUANDARY.

Did Not Know How to Act Under the Circumstances.

It required some coaxing to get the war department clerk to tell his story, but he yielded at last, notwithstanding the painful memories it brought, and this is what he told:

"Twelve years ago I married a lovely girl from dear old Virginia, and life became a benison to me. I was five years her senior, and we were perfectly adapted to each other. Our days passed swiftly by for five years, and our only child, a beautiful boy, was 3 years old. At that age a child, I think, is at its loveliest, and this boy of ours was the pride of our hearts. One Sunday—I shall never forget it, I am sure—my wife and the boy and I went off up the canal above Georgetown to pass a pleasant afternoon by the waterside. It was a delightful day in the summer, and we had a great, good time wandering about the woods and banks, until, quite tired out, we sat down in the shade overlooking some very picturesque locks. How it happened I never knew, but my wife and the boy started across the canal on the lock, and when I first noticed them they were nearly half way across, the boy holding on to the mother's skirts, and she apparently finding the footway very difficult to keep. Why she had ever undertaken such a hazardous walk I could not tell, nor did I stop to find causes. The two beings who were all the world to me were in jeopardy of their lives, and with a bound I was up and out upon the lock to help them.

"Possibly I may in my foolish haste have frightened them; possibly they were already nervous and thought they should turn back. Of that I cannot say. All I know is that as I came hurrying to them the mother turned, and in doing so stumbled some way against the boy, knocking him into the water above the lock, while she dove forward to the water below. It was all over in a second, and I stood there utterly paralyzed. Above me, struggling in the water was my boy, with his golden curls spread all around his head, and his little cap floating away, while in the eddies below I could see my wife's body whirled and tossed hither and yon by the cruel waves. I could not save both, and I stood irresolute and"—

"Good heavens!" exclaimed an excited listener, unable to restrain his feelings, "what did you do?"

"I awoke," smiled the clerk blandly, "and found the boy tickling my ear with a blade of grass, and my wife aiding and abetting him."—Washington Star.

Couldn't Disconcert the Doctor.

"I had been confined to my bed for a long time and it was a case in which my doctor forbade my drinking any water," remarked the ex-patient. "I stood it for awhile, but finally grew frantic for a drink It was refused. One day when my male nurse was in the room giving me some medicine I determined to make a bold stand. I said to him: 'Now, this is my

TWO OUNCES OF BLOOD DAILY.

TWO OUNCES OF BLOOD will fill a small wine glass, and that is the quantity of Rich Red Blood which is daily added to your blood vessels when you take one of Dr. Campbell's Red Blood Forming Capsuloids with each meal three times daily.

No other iron medicine will do this, because all others are unnatural, or acid preparations of iron, while Capsuloids contain natural iron identical with the iron already in your blood.

You Cannot Take any ordinary iron medicine, because it's acid, and injures teeth, stomach and bowels; but

You Can Take Capsuloids, or natural iron medicine, because it contains no acid, is perfectly natural, and perfectly mild.

Infants and invalids, as well as adults, take Capsuloids without feeling them in the slightest, even though they have never been able to take any other kinds of iron medicine.

What are Capsuloids? They are the natural iron called Hæmoglobin, extracted from the blood of healthy young bullocks. This natural iron is just the same as the iron in the human blood. We then inclose this dissolved natural iron in little soft pointed globes of pure gelatine. They are easily swallowed, are free from taste and smell, and their contents enter the blood within from one to three minutes after they are taken into the stomach.

Capsuloids are The Greatest of all Tonics for the nerves, heart, lungs, bronchial tubes, mucus membranes, liver, bowels, kidneys, and especially for all Monthly Irregularities, when these organs are affected with blood diseases.

Capsuloids act entirely through the blood, enriching it and increasing its quantity two ounces daily. The effect upon the health, color, nerves and spirit is seen almost immediately. Think of the power and effect of adding two ounces of Rich, Red, New Blood each day!

Many doctors have ceased using all other kinds of iron, and prescribe Capsuloids exclusively. Send for pamphlet, containing their testimonies, and local testimonials.

Dr. Campbell's Red Blood Forming Capsuloids are sold at fifty cents per box, six boxes for $2 50, by all leading druggists and by our local agents—A. W. GRANGE & BRO., and J. J. PERRY, Napanee—or sent to any address on receipt of price by The Capsuloid Co., Brockville, Ont.

This is not a patent or secret medicine. It is prescribed largely by doctors.

VICTORY FOR EAST SIMCOE.

Of one thing Mr. W. H. Bennett, the Conservative Standard Bearer in East Simcoe is Sure—He Suffered from Catarrhal Trouble and Found Speedy and Fixed Relief in Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder.

In the coming by election it will not be settled until the votes are counted, whether whether Mr. W. H. Bennett, who has represented the constituency for years, will again be the successful candidate. One thing Mr. Bennett is perfectly certain of whatever turn the election may take: When attending to his duties in Ottawa two seasons ago he was taken down with catarrhal trouble in the head. He used Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder and over his own signature says that it worked like a charm, and quickly removed the trouble and made him fitted for his parliamentary duties.

THE GLOVE.

It Is a Feature of Modern Rather Than Ancient Civilization.

The prevalence of the glove is a feature of modern rather than of ancient civilization. Musonius, writing in the first century, says, "It is shameful that persons in perfect health should clothe their hands and feet with soft and hairy coverings." It was undoubtedly the spirit of luxurious fashion that gradually advanced the glove to its present position. For every thousand gloves now worn as a protection from cold many thousands are worn simply as an adornment of the person.

The symbolism of gloves grew up slowly under mediæval fostering. The traces of this symbolism that still remain may be seen in the white gloves worn at weddings, the white gloves given at a maiden assize, the black gloves of funeral ceremonial. With the clergy the glove became a symbol of their office, its purity and incorruptnurse was in the room giving me some medicine I determined to make a bold stand. I said to him: 'Now, this is my case of sickness: this is my thirst; this is my house and I propose to have something to drink. Now, I want you to go down and get a bucket, fill it with water and keep it freshly supplied. Put it in the closet and keep the key in your pocket.'

"We argued for awhile and he finally yielded. That night relief came in the form desired. I drank like a famished camel. In the course of events I grew better, and one morning two weeks later, when the doctor told me I could go down to the office in a few days and his services were no longer needed, I thought to achieve a great victory in the field of medical science and told him how I had been off the reservation, so to speak, on the water issue.

"Instead of wilting he said: 'Ah, that is it. Your case has been wonderfully slow and stubborn for the past two weeks and I wondered what the trouble was. If you hadn't had the water, you would have been out a week ago, sir.'"—Washington Post.

Japanese Women.

The women of Japan have often been misunderstood, says K. Mitsukuri in the Atlantic. By those who have known them they have been pronounced the best part of Japan. They have been described as gentle, graceful, beautiful and self sacrificing. Not only in those gentler virtues, but also in some sterner aspects of life, the Japanese woman has shown time and again what she is made of. Any one who speaks against the purity of the Japanese woman knows not whereof he talks or is a vile slanderer who would deprive the woman of what is most precious to her. As the mistress of the family she has as much real authority in the family as her western sister. As a mother she is paid great deference by her children. In society a lady is always treated with respect. There are some respects in which changes are desirable, but, on the whole, I have no hesitation in saying that the position of woman in Japan is a very high one.

Berkshire Manners.

Mary Russell Mitford used to declare that there was no place in England like her "Sunny Berkshire." As to the country people, they were unmatched for their suavity, courtesy and respectful manners. One day Miss Mitford was walking through a pasture with an incredulous London lady. There was a lad driving a cow, and his manners were to be tested. "Now," said Miss Mitford, "you will see how gallant are our country folk." There was a gate to be opened, and the boy opened it, and the ladies passed through. There was triumph on the part of Miss Mitford. The London lady put a question to the boy, "You're not Berkshire, I'm sure," and this was the gentle boy's reply, "Theo'rt a liar, vor I be."—Exchange.

the black gloves of funeral ceremonial. With the clergy the glove became a symbol of their office, its purity and incorruptibility; with feudalism it became synonymous with knightly honor. The last resting place of old customs is generally to be found in popular phraseology—as when we speak of "throwing down the gauntlet." Even now at the coronation of British sovereigns the glove is thrown down in Westminster hall by the armed champion of majesty, and it is remembered that at the crowning of George II an unknown Jacobite came forward and raised the glove on behalf of the exiled Stuarts. It was a plucky though foolish action. In the days of the Plantagenets it appears that the kings were not only crowned with gloves on their hands, but were buried with them.

When the tomb of King John was opened in 1797, it was found that his hands were gloved, and the remains of Edward I were discovered in the same condition. The glove had long been a symbol of investiture, and possibly the kings were thus buried with some grim idea of investing them with the rights of the grave—their regal rights having passed to their successors. At the coronation of French kings, the royal gloves were blessed by the bishop who officiated. In some parts of Christendom bishops themselves were inducted to their dioceses by receiving a glove, investing them with temporal as well as spiritual rights. The glove became so associated with episcopal authority that at different times the wearing of gloves was absolutely prohibited to the lower clergy. While one council issued this edict, another declared that monks should only presume to wear gloves of common sheepskin. Episcopal gloves were often richly adorned, as we may gather from the fact that Bishop Recalfus, dying in the year 915, bequeathed a pair of gloves in his will. For the word glove it would appear that we are indebted to the Icelandic glof. As a gift of gloves was a mark of the highest honor, a token of investiture, a conferring of trust, so the deprival of a person's gloves was a sign of the deepest degradation. We read of the Earl of Carlisle, condemned to die as a traitor in the reign of Edward II, that his "spurs were cut off with a hatchet, and his gloves and shoes were taken off."

In yet another sense to lose the glove of a lady at tourney was a deep disgrace. Knights wore their ladies' dainty gloves as the most precious of insignia, and he who lowered his lady's honor need little look for her smiles. The practice of giving gloves to the judge at maiden assize probably had its origin in the fact that a judge was not supposed to wear gloves while on the bench; to present him with a pair might signify that he was now free to do as he chose.—London Standard.

CURBSTONE OPERA.

One New York Man Who Made a Fortune Tinkering Hand Organs.

A little man with a sunburned overcoat strapped about his loins was grinding a familiar air from a hand organ which he had fastened on a wheelbarrow.

"You won't find that kind of a hand organ in New York very often," said a man who prowls about the city. "It is the first one I have seen in two years. I have an idea that few if any are now manufactured. The piano street organ has taken its place. And that is the street music of New York. There used to be street musicians called German bands, like Johnny Morgan's, which Tony Pastor made familiar. But you don't see any more German bands in the streets. The music unions of the city drove them out. The street bands interfered with the concerts that used to be given. People wouldn't pay to hear music when they could hear it for nothing, and the street bands in those days tooted as well as the orchestras.

"I think that you will find that some sort of ordinance was passed prohibiting street bands from playing in certain districts. I know, however, that the action of the music unions drove away the street bands. Then the organs came in great numbers. But the music unions never made any fight on them. I don't know why. And we had organs day and night and of every kind.

"I remember there was a man in Elizabeth street who repaired organs. He never made any, for most of them are made in Berlin. But he got rich repairing street organs. He made so much money he retired from business. I have forgotten his name, but the old timers in Elizabeth street will recall it. The last I heard of him he was living in the old country, enjoying himself as hugely as princes are believed to do. Why, he made $500,000 just

HER NEW CAMERA.

It Put the Family In a Queer Plight Before the Minister.

Miss Macgillicuddie's new kodak came home from down town late Saturday night. If there had been light enough, she would have done a lot of snap shooting before she went to bed, but as kodak's don't work after dark she was obliged to wait till morning.

As soon as breakfast was over she picked up her new toy and made pictures of the dog and the cat until her mother protested so vigorously against such employments on Sunday morning that she had to desist. When the old folks had gone to church, however, Miss Macgillicuddie remaining at home because of a slight indisposition, the kodak was trotted out again. The young lady had tired, though, of photographing such commonplace subjects as the dog and the cat, so she sent to the house of a couple of friends and asked them to come over and pose for her. They came and were photographed in numerous poses, but the young artist wanted something lively and characteristic.

"You girls are always playing cards," she said. "Why shouldn't I photograph you in the midst of a game. You'll have to sit still only three or four minutes, and you can easily do that."

The other girls acquiesced and the cards and a set of poker chips were spread out on a lapboard between them. After the necessary posing and squinting to get everything in proper focus the cap was removed from the kodak.

Unfortunately Miss Macgillicuddie had taken no account of time during their morning's experiments, and the exposure was not more than a minute old when the front door opened and in walked her father and mother, accompanied by the new minister, whom they had brought home to Sunday dinner. The first thing they saw, of course, on entering the house was the poker game between the two young women, and the minister, discreetly looking away as soon as possible, failed to discover the kodak. Mrs. Macgillicuddie was embarrassed beyond expression by the sight and hurried away to her room, where she shed bitter tears. Mr. Macgillicuddie, however, tried to make explanation, but only succeeded in making matters worse.

"Not really a card game, I assure you, Mr. Fourthly," he stammered in an embarrassed fashion. "Girls only practicing with their new kodak."

The rattling of the cards and chips as the girls tried to scramble them out of sight seemed to disprove this statement, however, and Mr. Fourthly put an end to it all by saying coldly:

"Least said about that is surest mended, I am sure, Mr. Macgillicuddie."

He left the house as soon after dinner as he decently could without any one having the courage to make good the Evidence.

"Think of it!" exclaimed the somewhat pedantic citizen. "A generation or so ago boys were supposed to have a good knowledge of Latin before they were 16 years of age."

"What of that?" inquired the mild mannered friend.

"Doesn't that show that our pretended advancement in refinement is a misapprehension?"

"Not at all. It proves that we are more considerate and humane, and therefore more refined. Think of the amount of corporal punishment it must take to give a boy a good knowledge of Latin before he is 16 years old!"—Washington Star.

Reading Character.

Dribbler—In my opinion, a man who writes an illegible hand does it because he thinks people are willing to puzzle over it. In other words, he is a chunk of conceit.

Scribbler—Not always. Sometimes a man writes illegibly not because he is conceited, but because he is modest.

Dribbler—Modest? What about?

Scribbler—About his spelling.—New York Weekly.

DON'T CHIDE THE CHILDREN.

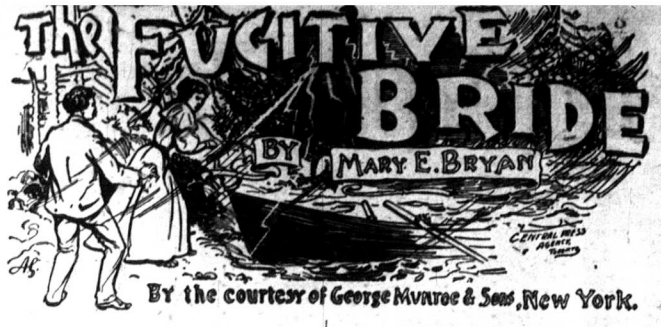
Don't scold the little ones if the bed is wet in the morning. It isn't the child's fault. Weak kidneys need strengthening—that's all. You can't afford to risk delay. Neglect may entail a lifetime of suffering.

DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS

Strengthen the Kidneys and Bladder, then all trouble ceases.

Mr. John Carson, employed at M. S. Bradt & Co.'s store, Hamilton, Ont., says:

"My little boy seven years of age has been troubled with his kidneys since birth and could not hold his water. We spent hundreds of dollars doctoring and tried many different remedies, but they were of no avail. One box of Doan's Kidney Pills completely cured him."



By the courtesy of George Munroe & Sons, New York.

He turned to unlock the door, and Dusky fled, swift and noiseless as a mouse, to her hiding-place. He came out and relocked the door; then he walked up and down the narrow passage and presently he flung himself upon a faded lounge that stood against the wall only a few feet from the closed door of the lumber-room behind which Dusky stood. That imp was too angry to feel alarmed at her ticklish situation.

"I wish I dared open this door a little bit and get a pinch at your flop ear," she said to herself. "Marry her! Yes, I knowed all along that was what you was up to. Poor Irma! That straight nose and white throat of hern does git her into a sight of scrapes. I'm glad my nose turns up and my skin is brown as a chinky-pin, so nobody won't be gittin' me into a corner and swearin' I sha'n't git out till I promise to marry 'em."

There was the sound of a slow, heavy step upon the stairs, and presently Dusky heard the asthmatic cough of old Nick.

"You were long time coming," his master said sharply. "I called you twenty minutes ago."

"I was huntin' for you," responded the negro, in his gruff bass tones. "You is like de flea, now in one place, now in anudder. What you want "

"I wanted you to go to the tower and clean up the secret room at the top. I—"

"Dere now. My ole 'oman's gone to de weddin' wid dem keys in her pocket!"

"What for you give 'em to her?" cried the doctor, sharply.

"Didn't you tell me to? Didn't you say dat time Mort stole 'em, dat she was carefuller dan me?"

"Well, take my own keys. And bring 'em back in one hour. Clean t'e secret room nicelee. Open t'e window and air everyt'ing well. Leafe no bad smell. Brush off t'e dust and put rugs down in t'e sitten-room and lay a folded coverleed and a fresh pillow on t'e lounge. Gif him hees supper and a sleepin' powder and fasten him up in t'e leetle bedroom. Kindle a teenie fire in t'e other room—t'e night may be chillee."

"'Pears like you is spectin' to put somebody else up in dat leetle jail?"

"Yes—for one leetle while."

"'Tain't Mort, I reckon. You wouldn't want much fixing up for him. He oughter be jugged up better'n he is. He was a-tryin' to break de lock er one of de window shetters last night, and I had to threaten him wid you. He's dat cunnin he tries to slip out ever' time I take his victuals up, and he's allers mutterin' about burnin up de place."

"The 'Bayou Belle' will take him away—down to the mad-house. It will take t'e other one too, may be."

"Glory for dat! A sight of trouble dey've been," said the squat giant. "And den I hope de ole tower'll git struck by lightin' and burn up. It oughter. Ef it ain't ha'nted, den I don't know nothin'. I seen her two nights ago. She was standin'—"

"Silence! black fool," cried his master, a sudden flash leaping from his usually soft eye. "There are no ghostees. You ees the greatest hobgoblein. Go, do as I telled you."

The square-shouldered Hercules quailed before the eye and voice of the slender, frail-looking master, the supremacy of brain over muscle asserting itself in the negro's downcast look as he turned off with the keys in his hand and descended the stairs.

Dr. Prudhomme threw himself back upon the lounge and drew a deep, sighing breath. Then he muttered to himself in French. Dusky caught the disjointed phrases: "Tired of it all." "Turn over the place to Vanhorn and the infernal tower business." "Take what money he will give me and go to France. If that girl—"

Here he sprang to his feet.

"I am an old fool," he cried, "but I'll not give up yet. She is in my power—"

He walked rapidly up and down the passage three times. Dusky counted them with beating heart, fearing he white shawl, so that its folds would hide where the mask ended.

She drew the shawl around her as she remembered it was drawn in the portrait, and surveyed herself in the broken mirror.

She danced a jig in her satisfaction.

"I'm ghostly looking for true," she said. "A good enough ghost to scare Old Nick out of his wits. I'll slip out to the tower, and loom on him when he comes out. He's such a poke he hasn't more'n got up to the secret room, and gone to work yet. I must keep a look-out for the fox. Wouldn't I be a plucked chicken if he caught me, though! He'd shut me up with the rest in the old tower, and Mort and me would have a monkey-and-parrot time, sure!"

She caught up the trailing skirt here and there, and fastened the loops with pins. She threw a black water-proof cloak around her and drew the hood over her lace-covered head.

"Now for it," she said. "I'll not even stop to speak to Irma through the key-hole."

She crept swiftly, stealthily, down-stairs. Nobody was in the hall—all was silent. She descended the second flight of stairs, and found all below quiet and empty of human presence.

Peering through a front window, she saw in the twilight Dr. Prudhomme's spare figure, defined against the fading sky, as he stood on the bayou-bank, waiting the coming of the boat, whose 'scape-pipe could now be heard around the bend of the stream.

"I am safe from him for the present," Dusky said to herself, as she turned from the window, and ran down the back steps into the yard. In three minutes she had reached the tower. The gate was locked, but she had climbed the wall before this, by the aid of the wild graps and trumpet vines. She clambered over it now, in spite of the long skirts, and found her way to the narrow, crooked stairs, which ran down under the high-built tower. She crept up the steps, and stopped upon the landing before the locked door. She stood there against the wall, awaiting the appearance of Nick.

She waited for more than ten minutes, though it seemed as many hours, before she heard the negro's heavy descending tread.

She had left the black wrap in a myrtle thicket below, and she stood there in her trailing ghost robes, with the lace shawl drawn about the painted face, and her keen, black pupils peering through the painted eyeballs of the dead woman, whose ghost was said to haunt the tower.

It was dark as midnight, but Nick would have a lantern.

"All the better," thought Dusky. "It needs a nice, uncertain sort of light to set off my ghost-looks to advantage."

Yes; the negro janitor had a lantern. She could see its light, flung ahead of him, streaming through the crack under the door. He stood a little while, fumbling with the lock. Her heart stopped beating as he opened the door. He had taken the key from the lock on the inside; now he inserted it into the key-hole on the outside, and she heard the bolt click as it shot to its place. He removed the key, he was about to turn and descend the steps when the white figure stepped forward and confronted him. For an instant he did not know what it meant. He flashed the light of the lantern over it. He saw the face, the dress, the white, draped shawl of the portrait he had just beheld in the tower-room. It was the face of the woman who had died there; it was her ghost. Terror paralyzed the black Hercules. He stood rooted to the spot, shaking from head to foot, the eyes starting from his ashy face.

The ghost came a step nearer to him, and he staggered back against the wall, staring at it in speechless fright.

"Nicholas Ball," said the ghost, in a hollow voice, "you are doing the devil's work; you will get hot pitch and brimstone down below. Give me the keys!"

As she spoke, she stretched out her

"The way is clear," she said. "The doctor has gone to the landing to meet his visitors. Old Nick has shut himself up in his cabin, I reckon, and barred the door against the ghosts. Now for the tower. Stop, I'll take one of the doctor's tall candles. It's dark in the tower as a bagful of black cats."

Gripping Irma's hand with her little,

"I can never forget you, good one," she said.

She held the light while Dusky went down the narrow stairs and unclosed the secret door. The next instant she had passed out of sight, and Irma turned slowly and looked about the narrow bare room; then suddenly became attent; for she heard a voice muttering audibly behind the thin partition.

Dusky had, meantime crept through the secret door, and stood inside the chamber occupied by Mort. But it was in utter darkness, and, she did not know where to turn. She lit a match, and as its light flared up, she saw the horrible face and burning eyes of Mort not far from her. He was looking at her intentedly. He approached a step nearer, his lips parted in a distorting grin that showed his strong yellow teeth. Dusky made a terrified bound for the door, unlocked it, and rushed out, locking it after her with trembling fingers. She had expected him to spring after her and try to escape. She wondered he had not made the attempt. Could she have seen him at the moment she was locking the door, she would have felt keen alarm rather than self-congratulation. In her fright, she had dropped the box of matches, and its contents were scattered over the floor. Chuckling with delight, the dwarf threw himself on his knees and eagerly felt for and picked up the matches. His mania for setting fire to anything that would burn was inflamed by his hatred of Dr. Prudhomme, and his resentment at being confined. He hugged the matches to his heart.

"Now I will pay them for all," he muttered. "I will burn up everything There will be a wind to-night. It will carry the flames and sparks. They shall roast in their beds—Old Nick and the conjurer. We'll see, we'll see. I shall dance to hear them yell and see them squirm!"

CHAPTER XXI.

The name of the bayou boat was a sarcasm. The "Belle" was a dingy little craft with a stern wheel, and a single chimney. But she was strong, and her tiny engine puffed lustily as she lay at the landing, being made fast to a tree by red-shirted roustabouts.

The gangway plank was thrown out, and three men walked to shore. One, short, stout, red-whiskered—Connolly, a deputy sheriff. One, spare, dark, sallow, with a hooked nose and small ferret-like black eyes—Michael Vanhorn. The last who leaped lightly to the bank, had a lithe figure and a handsome, subtle face. This was Harold

PAIN IN THE HEART.

Too serious a condition to neglect.

A Guelph harness maker tells how he was cured.

Mr. Wm. Dyson, the well known saddler and harness maker of Guelph, Ont., makes the following statement: "I heartily recommend Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills to anyone suffering from nervousness and heart trouble. They are a splendid medicine for such complaints. For a long time I was afflicted with nervousness and pain in my heart, which was especially severe at night, often destroying my rest. These pills cured me and invigorated my nervous system which is now strong and healthy. They restored restful sleep besides removing the distressing heart pains which formerly gave me so much anxiety and trouble."

the passage three times. Dusky counted them with beating heart, fearing he would stop before her hiding-place and open the door. But presently she heard his going down-stairs. She sprang eagerly from behind the cracked mirror. A wild, seemingly impracticable idea had shaped itself in her fertile imagination. It had been suggested by old Nick's reference to the ghost. If she could work on his superstitious fancy, frighten him and get him to give up the keys Dr. Prudhomme had intrusted to him. On the strong steel ring were strung not only the keys to the tower, but the key to Dr. Prudhomme's room and to his study. If she had the key to the study she could free Irma. She could not help thinking that Bert Fontenoy could do something to save the woman he loved if she were with him. It was now growing dusk—nearly the hour of seven when Fontenoy would be waiting for his bride not three hundred yards from the place where she sat a prisoner awaiting a yet harder fate.

"I must get her out of there," Dusky said. "I'll make myself into a ghost and scare Old Nick into handing over them keys. I'll make myself up to look like 'her'—as he called Mort's mother. I'll find clothes and things in these trunks to fix me up right."

She turned to the dust-covered boxes that held the dead Mrs. Prudhomme's finery. She had several times unpacked and carried down armfuls of dresses, shawls and laces for Blanche to look over. Among these she remembered a certain long white satin robe—the same, it seemed, that Mort's mother had worn when her portrait was painted. That portrait Dusky had seen the time she crept in the wake of the overseer and beheld Solon Vanhorn in his coffin. She would dress herself to look like the picture. She knew where she had put the satin robe, and she hastily threw open the largest trunk made of old-fashioned sole-leather, moldy and stained. She found the dress, drew it out and shook out its long, crumpled folds. It was almost dark in the old lumber-room, and Dusky hurriedly rolled some papers together, lighted them with a match from the box of lucifers she always carried in her pocket, to light the long, shapely cigarettes which she made of tobacco leaves gathered and dried—and threw the pile of twisted, lighted papers upon the musty, long-unused hearth. As they burned she rummaged the trunk, found a white lace shawl that suited her purpose, and something else which pleased her still better. At the bottom of the trunk she caught sight of a face which made her start at first almost in a fright. The next instant, she drew it out with a little exclamation of delight. It was the face of the very woman whose ghost she was about to represent. It was a study of the face of the portrait in the tower. There was just the face and throat, not smoothly finished, but with a look of life even more striking than in the completed picture. With a pair of sharp little scissors that hung at her side Dusky cut off all the background from the picture, leaving only the face like a mask. To pin a string on each side of this mask, for the purpose of trying it on, and to cut out the centre of each eyeball, that her own bright pupils might look forth through the holes, was the work of half a minute. And then her light having nearly flickered out, Dusky tore out more old magazine leaves and replentished the flame on the hearth, while she made her ghost-toilet before the cracked mirror.

She put on the white satin robe, delighted to see how tall it made her look. It was a world too large and long, but she would fix that. She tied on the picture-face, and over her head and around her face, she arranged the lace shawl, so that it fell in long folds to her feet. Then she stood before the mirror and surveyed herself. She was startled at the ghostly reflection. She could not help shuddering as she thought of the dead woman whose face she wore. She was ready for her task. She had only to wait for the return of the old negro. She had not long to wait. She heard his step on the stairs, and hastily retreated to the dark corner behind the door.

Old Nick entered, and set down the candle on the floor. He looked around the room, and then, with a sigh of relief, turned toward the door. Dusky stepped out behind him, and touched him on the shoulder. He turned, and with a cry of terror fell on his knees before her.

"Oh, Lawd! Oh, Lawd!" he cried, "I knowed you'd come back. I knowed you'd come back. Don't look at me dat way, Miss Mort's mudder. I didn't do it. I didn't do it. I was only a nigger. I was only a nigger. Don't look at me dat way."

"Where is the key of the study?" Dusky said, in a deep, hollow voice.

"Oh, Lawd! Oh, Lawd!" the negro cried, "she wants de key of de study. She wants de key of de study. Don't look at me dat way, Miss Mort's mudder. I'll get it. I'll get it. Don't look at me dat way."

"Where is the key of the study?" Dusky repeated.

"It's on de ring, Miss Mort's mudder. It's on de ring. I'll get it. I'll get it. Don't look at me dat way."

"Where is the ring?" Dusky asked.

"It's on de table, Miss Mort's mudder. It's on de table. I'll get it. I'll get it. Don't look at me dat way."

"Get it, then," Dusky said.

The negro rose from his knees and approached Nick. The negro was kneeling and praying as for dear life, with beads of perspiration on his black brow. His master shook him roughly.

"What—who was that?" he demanded.

"Don't—don't you see?" stammered the negro. "Don't you see 'twas ghost—her ghost—de very spit of her pictur' up yander?"

His master snatched the lantern from his hand, and hurried down the steps. He flashed the light here and there among the dark, matted shrubbery.

No ghost was to be seen. No wonder; it was already inside the house, chuckling to itself as it fled up the steps to Irma's garret-prison.

"There is nothing here," Dr. Prudhomme said. "There is nobody on the place—no woman, but the one I have locked up. And that face! Mon Dieu! can it be her ghost? Do the dead live again? Can they come back, and—"

A shrill whistle, followed by the ringing of a boat-bell, broke upon his perplexed and terrified conjecturing. He turned his steps toward the house.

"I must go to the landing to meet them," he said to himself; "but, first, I must have a glass of brandy."

He wiped his clammy brow, and turned toward the house.

Irma had been restlessly moving about the shadowy study, listening to the sound of the approaching boat. Now she sat down by the window and looked out across the wide orchard to the wall of forest beyond. She thought she could single out from the mass the dark green top of the pecan-tree, under which her lover was perhaps at that moment waiting for her.

She heard the key grate in the lock of the door behind her, but she did not turn her head. It was Dr. Prudhomme, she thought, come to renew his offer. She felt too indignant against him to make any show of listening to him. When he had done, she would answer him with one brief monosyllable, as hard and stern as she could make it.

"Irma, Irma, where are you?"

It was Dusky's voice. Irma rose quickly, and went toward the dark figure standing in the middle of the dim room. The black wrap suddenly fell to the floor, and a white apparition confronted Irma. She uttered a startled exclamation, and stepped back.

"Oh, ho!" chuckled the girl. "I must be a success as a ghost, for I have scared you. But I haven't time for you to admire me," she went on, snatching the mask from her face. "We must get out of here at once. We must get away from here. Come!"

"Where, Dusky?"

"To the pecan-tree."

"No; I have told you I would not bring another into my trouble."

"But when that other is your own husband, or as good as your husband, I am sure—"

"No, Dusky!"

"Oh, my goodness! there is the boat-whistle. Irma, you must go—somewhere. They must not find you. Look here; you see this big bunch of keys? All the keys of the tower are here—the one to the secret top story. If you would go and hide in there, they would never find you; and you would see the ghost; you would find out what it was. Who knows but—"

She stopped abruptly. The thought that had flashed into her brain seemed improbable to be uttered. Yet the same thought came into Irma's mind. She said suddenly:

"I will go to the tower. Come!"

"Let me go ahead, and see if the way is clear," said Dusky.

She went out, and Irma heard her going softly down-stairs. She was not gone three minutes; when she returned her face beamed with satisfaction. She had found the key to the tower as a bagful of black cats.

Gripping Irma's hand with her little, wiry, nervous fingers, she drew her out of the room and locked the door behind them. Down the stairs and through the dusky passages they sped, and came out under the starlit sky. Making their way along the walks lined with untrimmed shrubbery, they came to the gate of the Grenadier. It was not fastened, and Dusky pushed it open. Dark it surely was in the narrow landing at the head of the stairs, but Dusky found the right key, and, once inside, she lit the candle. By its light, they went up two flights of stairs and stopped before the door of the room in which Mort's mother had died. Dusky bent her head, and listened at the key-hole.

"Thank goodness, Mort is asleep," she said. "He snores like a bear I heard once when we was huntin' muscadines. I hope he won't wake."

She softly unlocked the door, and they stole into the room. Mort lay back in a deep chair, asleep and breathing heavily. They crept across the floor and lifted the portrait from its place before the secret door. In half a minute Irma had found the key-hole cunningly hidden in the carving of the panel-like door, and had inserted into it the curiously shaped little key. The door opened noiselessly, and Dusky, candle in hand, went first—to see if all was well, she said. "The thing, whatever it is, may be ravin' crazy, and try to kill us," she whispered.

"No," returned Irma, "I feel quite sure he is too feeble to be dangerous. His ghastly face and weak voice make me sure he can do little harm."

They climbed up the narrow, steep stairs, until at last a room was reached at the very top of the building—a small, unfinished room with walls of hewn cypress upon three sides, and black, cobwebbed rafters overhead. It was clean and dusted. There was a table, and a lounge with a clean pillow upon it. An earthen pitcher of water was on the table, and a rug was spread before the lounge.

Irma's eyes flew quickly all around the little bare room. "He is not here—where can he be?" she said.

Dusky pointed to a door in the wall on the left. This wall was of plank, and was evidently a partition dividing this top storey into two rooms.

"He is in there," Dusky said, pointing to the door. "I heard Doctor Prudhomme tell Nick to give him a sleepin' powder, and fasten him in his bedroom. This door is mighty frail," she said, shaking it slightly. "If a body wanted to break it in and see the mystery, as you call the prisoner, it would not be hard to do. But I'm sure there's a key to this little inner room hanging up somewhere around. If I had time I'd find it, but I had better go and keep a lookout on the outside, Irma, will you be afraid to stay here?"

"No," said the pale girl wearily. "I think I am not afraid of anything that may happen. I feel prepared for the worst."

"But you must hope for the best, and don't lose heart. Remember, them that love you will be prayin' for you and workin' for you, and ready to give half their blood to help you. I hate to leave you in this ghostly old place, but I'll come to you as soon as I can, and bring you the news. Now, good-bye. Christ's mother pity you and keep you from harm, my dear, my dearest."

Dusky's voice suddenly broke. She caught Irma's hand, and would have kissed it, but the girl put her arms around the slim figure, and kissed her on the lips.

bank, had a lithe figure and a handsome, subtle face. This was Harold Vane.

Dr. Prudhomme received his visitors with repressed nervousness. He led the way up to the house and into the sitting-room. He summoned Nick, and when the negro came, still dazed and trembling from his encounter with the ghost, he brought back his scattered senses by a stern look and a muttered threat.

"Set out brandy and cigars," he commanded.

Nick opened an old-fashioned sideboard and set out a decanter of liquor, three slim Venetian glasses, and a sandal-wood box filled with small Havana cigars.

The deputy promptly seized the decanter and poured out a glassful of the pale, fiery liquor, which he gulped down without winking. Vanhorn drank his brandy more leisurely. He seemed to be furtively watching Dr. Prudhomme and his yellow forehead wore a frown. Harold Vane did not drink. He approached Dr. Prudhomme and drew him aside just without the sitting-room door.

"Pardon me," he said, "I would like to have a word or two with you. I am the chief detective employed to work up the Vanhorn case. I am here now to identify the girl. I have been investigating the case, and I am convinced that Irma Weir died of yellow fever on her way to the city, and was taken from the steam-boat and buried on a sandbar. I had proofs of her death and burial, which I turned over to the chief of the police. No doubt as to the truth of this existed in the mind of Mr. Vanhorn until your letter came. I am of the opinion that you are mistaken—that it is not Irma Weir you have here. While I was working up the case, I came across a girl whose appearance and history corresponded somewhat with Irma Weir's. That young woman has quitted the friends she was living with. It may be that it is she whom you have here and taken to be Irma Weir. Had you ever seen Irma Weir before the murder?"

"No," Dr. Prudhomme answered, after a pause.

"Has this young woman been recognized by any on as Irma Weir?"

Dr. Prudhomme hesitated, standing before him with head half bent as though reflecting. Suddenly he raised his head and said, with quiet hauteur:

"I will answer questions put to me by the proper personne. You have not the authoritee. Haf you any more to say to me?"

"I wish to see this young woman one moment before the arrest takes place."

"I do not think it will be possible,"

Dr. Prudhomme answered, bowing with cold courtesy.

Harold threw up his head.

"I do not believe you have the real Irma Weir in this house," he said sharply. "I believe she is dead and buried long since. You will find yourself mistaken, and Vanhorn will be furious at having been fooled."

Dr. Prudhomme's eyes flashed, but he only bit his lip and dismissed Vane by a haughty wave of the hand. He turned back into the room. Vanhorn was standing in the middle of the room, waiting for him. He touched the doctor's arm.

"Come out on the porch, Prudhomme," he said. "I have a few words to say to you."

"But first, as to our business," interposed the burly sheriff. "The woman we've got the warrant for—is she safe?"

"She is here in the house."

"And she doesn't suspect we are about to nab her?"

"She is quiet in her room. I will go up and see if—"

"First, I must have a word with you, I say," interrupted Vanhorn, drawing him roughly away. The little Frenchman shot a malignant glance at the crafty-eyed Hebrew, and moved off reluctantly with him. He wanted to have a last interview with Irma Weir, and inform her that the officer waited down-stairs with a warrant for her arrest, and that he would save her on the terms he had before offered. But he obeyed the cold eye and voice of Vanhorn, and followed him to the piazza.

"And now," began the Jew, planting his gaunt form and thin, sharp visage before his host, "will you have the kindness to tell me what you mean by your late conduct?"

"What conduct?" said Dr. Prudhomme sullenly.

"Why have you hunted up that wretched girl, brought her here, of all places in the world, and permitted her to pry into a secret that is of life and death importance to both of us?"

"It was all accident. I wrote you that."

"It was a want of ordinary sense and caution. What business had you to bring any woman here, where there was a secret to keep? And this woman, the very one who is interested in exposing the secret, you have let her find out. Of course she will expose it. She would do it if her life depended on her doing otherwise. There is nothing now but to send her to the penitentairy,and to see that the top storey of the tower holds no secret when it is searched, if searched it should be. I wanted never to hear of the girl again. I was in hopes she was dead and he bent his head in acquiescence, but no word escaped his lips.

"Now to business," said Vanhorn. "You say the young woman is here, and does not suspect that she is to appear in a new role to-night. Call Connolly and show him the way to my lady's chamber!"

"First let me see if she is in there, or with my little girl," Dr. Prudhomme said quickly. "Remain you here," he added, with a peremptory wave of his head, as Vanhorn seemed about to follow him. "This is my house."

"The old scamp is up to some trick, I suspect," muttered Vanhorn, looking after him as he ascended the stairs. Prudhomme, too, was muttering to himself—muttering in French as he went up to the study-room in which he had locked Irma.

"I will tell her there is no hope," he said, "that they are here to arrest her. I will make my proposition for the last time. If she agrees, I will slip her off into the secret story of the tower. This they will never search. If she refuses, what then? I will save her all the same—may be; and gratitude—"

He suddenly remembered that he did not have the key to the study. It was on the bunch of keys he had given Nick. He called to the negro in his shrill, sweet falsetto, bidding him come quickly. He heard the shuffling feet coming up the creaking stairs, and he had stopped before the locked door but an instant before the negro appeared.

"The keys," Dr. Prudhomme said. "Why did you not bring them before? Give them to me."

"I ain't got de keys. I ain't had no chance to tell you how de—"

"Where are the keys?" Dr. Prudhomme interupted, sternly.

"For de Lor's sake don't look at me dat way! De gose got de keys! I ain'e to blame."

"The ghost."

"You seed her yourself. You knowed her—she jes' walked outer de picter and folowed me to de door, and says she, 'Give me dem keys'—and de keys jus' dropped outer my hand like I been struck wid lightnin.' Dat's de—"

"Fool!" cried Dr. Prudhomme. "It was no ghost at all. It was a plot, a trick to get the keys. Burst the door open."

The squat giant obeyed him. He threw his broad shoulder against the door--once—twice. The door gave way and Dr. Prudhomme entered the room. To his astonishment he found it empty. He lit a candle and searched every nook and recess of the study. He tried the windows and found the blinds still locked.

"You see now what the ghost want with the key," he said to Nick. "The girl is gone!" He rushed down stairs to meet," he said. "Fontenoy was to come at seven o'clock."

"Seven o'clock—it is about that time now!" exclaimed Harold.

"Yes; she may be just now gone. We may get there before they drive off. Come!"

He hurried out, followed by the others. There was a bright starlit sky overhead, for a crisp wind had swept away the clouds. Dr. Prudhomme and Harold were in the lead. In five minutes they had reached the foot of the orchard. In the shadow of the great trees they saw a vehicle with a large black horse attached. A man stood beside the horse. When they came up to him, he stepped out of the shadow, and stood before them.

"We want Irma Weir," said the panting sheriff. Bert Fontenoy looked at him haughtily and did not speak.

"Where is Irma Weir" asked Dr. Prudhomme.

Bert wheeled upon him fiercely.

"Yes, where is she?" he echoed. "I ask that question of you. It is you who have kept her from coming to me. What right had you to do it?"

"He's just bluffing," interposed the deputy. "The girl is hiding somewhere in these woods. I'll call my dog, and we'll soon have missy at bay."

"Dog yourself!" cried Bert, indignantly. "I'll teach you to speak with more respect of a lady too good for you to name!"

He caught up his riding-whip and raised it to inflict a blow on the fat shoulders of the deputy. But Vanhorn caught his arm.

"Stop," he said. "This man is an officer of the law. It is his business to trace and find and take into custody any who have broken that law. Irma Weir has broken it. She is a fugitive from justice. You may as well tell where she is hidden; it will be useless for her to try to escape."

"I have told you I do not know where she is. If I did, do you suppose I would tell you? You have no real, whatever legal, right, to arrest Irma Weir."

"Do you know her story? Has she told it to you?" asked Vane, with evident eagerness.

"She has told me her story," Bert answered, turning a scornful look on his questioner. "I know, too, the part taken in it by her pretended brother. I know she has done nothing to deserve punishment. A helpless, deceived girl has a right to defend herself against a villian who has trapped her into marrying him by false representations. If she is taken, I'll see that she gets justice, if justice is to be had. And I'll ferret out the mystery and jugglery there is in this affair if brains and money and persistence can do it."

Vanhorn changed color under the young man's fixed, stern look. Then he said hurriedly:

"This talk is all bosh! Connolly, get to business. Here is your dog. Set him to work. Hi! there comes Old Nick. What is that he is shouting?"

The cry came to them distinctly now.

"Fire! De Grenadier's a-fire!"

They turned their eyes in the direction of the tower. Smoke was pouring from the windows of the second story. Smoke was pouring from the windows of the second story. As they looked, a bright flame licked out its long tongue from one of the windows, quickly followed by another.

"It is Mort's work! My God! they will both be burned to death," cried Dr. Prudhomme. "They are locked up."

"Silence, fool," whispered Vanhorn in his ear. The long nails of the Hebrew printed themselves in the doctor's arm. Then he said aloud

"There is no use to try to save the old tower. The dry logs will burn like tinder. The wretched lunatic has already been suffocated."

They were hurrying to the scene of the fire. A weird little figure came flying to meet them.

"Help her! Save her!" she cried, running up to Bert. "She is burning up!"

"Who? not Irma!"

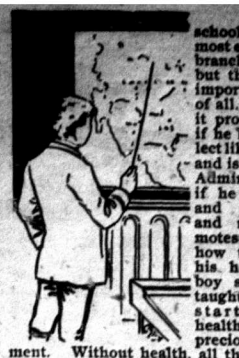
"Yes, Irma; she is up there in the Grenadier's head—in the secret story. I can't get to her. The second story is all a-blaze. There! don't you hear the scream? Is it Mort—the crazy humpback—or is it her? Oh! Christ have mercy upon Irma."

She uttered the broken exclamation as she ran side by side with Bert. Harold was close behind.

As they neared the tower they saw plainly that nothing could save it from destruction. The wind was rising. The flames were issuing from the windows of the second story. They caught the outer walls and leaped upward triumphantly.

"Look! oh, look!" cried Dusky, pointing up.

At the window, at the top of the tower, just under its helmet roof, appeared a face. A cloud of smoke ob-



The public schools teach almost every known branch of study but the one most important branch of all. What does it profit your son if he has an intellect like a Newton, and is mentally an Admiral Crichton, if he has a weak and puny body and not the remotest idea of how to care for his health? A boy should be taught from the start that his health is his most precious endowment. Without health, all the talent, all the genius, and all the ambition in the world are worthless. A boy should be taught that success in any walk of life, that happiness, and life itself, are dependent upon his care of his health.

When a man feels that he is losing his health and vigor, when his cheeks no longer glow, his step is no longer elastic and the sparkle of health is no longer in his eyes, he should work less, rest more and resort to the right remedy to restore his bodily vigor. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a natural medicine—a scientific medicine. It does no violence to nature. It works with and not against nature. It promotes the natural processes of secretion and excretion. It imparts vitality and power to the whole system. It gives plumpness and color to the cheeks, sparkle to the eyes, steadiness to the nerves, strength to the muscles and the animation of health to the whole body. It makes the appetite keen and hearty. It is the great blood-maker, flesh-builder and nerve-tonic and restorative. Medicine dealers sell it and have absolutely nothing else "just as good."

"I was afflicted with pimples and boils, and running sores on face and neck," writes Robert S. Wert, Esq., of No. 615 Galloway Ave., Columbus, Ohio. "I took Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Pleasant Pellets,' and was cured."

Constipation is the commonest beginning and first cause of many serious diseases and it should always be treated with Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets used in connection with the "Discovery." These are the most perfect natural laxatives and permanently cure.

ing the rescued man, and laid him down a few feet in front of Irma.

"Is he dead?" she asked anxiously.

"No, he has only fainted," said Harold. "At least, I think so, for I feel a feeble pulsation of his heart; but he is the image of death. What is he? Who is he? Skeleton that he is, he has somehow a familiar look."

Irma did not reply. Dusky had gone over to the man and was drenching his face with water. In a little while he revived and looked about him intelligently. He was in truth almost a skeleton. He would not have weighed more than sixty pounds, yet he seemed once to have been a fleshy man, for the skin of his face and neck hung loose and flabby. He wore neat, clean underclothes, but his hair and beard were matted.

Bert came up and knelt down by Irma, and she lay with half-closed eyes and flushed cheeks, her long hair damp and curling from the water, which Dusky had liberally bestowed upon her face and head. He took her hands and pressed them to his breast.

"Brave, strong little hands!" he said. "My darling is a heroine. Thank God, she is saved!"

She lifted her eyes to him and smiled.

"If you had not come to my help so soon, it would have been all over with us. I could not have held out after he fainted, he was such a dead weight."

"Who is he, Irma? He is the strangest-looking creature I ever saw."

"I do not know who he is. I dare not tell you what I have imagined; you would think me crazy. Go and speak to him. Ask him who he is. Is he conscious?"

"Yes; he is sitting up. He looks like one just risen from the grave. All but his eyes. They are glowing with life and excitement. He seems to have roused up from some brain lethargy."

"Where is Dr. Prudhomme?"

Neither he nor Michael Vanhorn was to be seen. The burly deputy was standing close by, wiping his steaming brow. Harold Vane was bending over the recovered man, staring at him with a face full of wild bewilderment.

"Who are you?" he burst out at last.

The hollow eyes turned upon Vane and gazed at him fixedly.

"Who am I?" he said, in a husky, unequal tones. "I don't know—hardly. I used to be Solon Vanhorn."

"Solon Vanhorn! That can't be. Solon Vanhorn is dead! He is buried only a few yards from here."

"Then I must be his ghost. It seems to me I have been dead and buried.

wanted never to hear of the girl again. I was in hopes she was dead and buried, or gone out of further hearing."

"You made great show of having her hunted down. Reward, detective, and all that!"

"You know why I did that. At first it was thought my brother would live. I knew it would gratify him to have his would-be murderess punished."

"Ah, yes! It would so gratify him he would take his bankrupt brother as partner of his rich business. He would haf no wife as partner of his rich haf no wife and childs to be heir to his propertee. It would all go to his younger brother—you, Monseuir Vanhorn. It is all yours—monee, and stocks, and lands. These very house and lands here—"

"You know that is not so. I gave you the mortgage on this place in consideration that you would do—you know what."

"Yes, I know t'e compact. I wish many times and more it nevaire had been made. But it is too late now—too late! And I must do somethin' for my child's sake. I want to go away from t'is place. Monsieur Vanhorn, I will sell it to you for one-fourth part of its value—all this t'ousand acres of so rich lands and splendid timber."

"We will talk of that afterwards; now for the matter in hand. This girl has turned up; with your usual propensity for bad luck you have managed to unearth her. I would have paid her to keep out of the way; but here you have allowed her to find out a secret that it was your vital interest to guard. She will not keep this secret, even if she could be bribed to do it. Women cannot keep secrets. She has probably a lover whom she is sure to communicate with. Is it not so?"

"Yes, she haf a lover—young Fontenoy, of Illysandria."

"Son of Lafayette Fontenoy. I know his father; he hates me like poison; he would take pleasure in my ruin. That settles the girl's fate! I suppose the young man and his family know her only in her assumed character. She will have to be exposed, disgraced and her word made of no account. You say she knows there is somebody confined at the top of the tower; does she know or suspect who it is?"

"She saw his face at the window. The blind came unfastened with the wind. When I put the meesmeric influence on her, she say, as answer to my question, 'The face looks like the man they told me was dead.'"

"That's enough, and too much. She goes to the penitentiary for manslaughter. Her fate be on your head, fruit of your carelessness! When I gave you that charge I thought you to have no further trouble—I thought—"

"You thought I would take such little care that soon t'ere would be no leevin's secret. But I am no murderer, Monsieur Vanhorn; and some constitution are veree tough."

"Well, you want money; you want to go away, and you cannot leave things in the tower as they are. If there should be an investigation and a grave should be opened, a body must be found there, you understand that?"

Emile Prudhomme turned a more livid pallor as the sharp, hard, fox-like eyes looked into his. His hand involuntary clinched. It pierced him to the quick to be in subjection to this lower spirit. He had the instincts of honor and compassion, and his persistent evil luck had not quite crushed these out.

When his interlocutor repeated more emphatically, "You understand that?"

with the key, he said to Nick. "The girl is gone!" He rushed down stairs.

"Irma Weir is gone!" he exclaimed, bursting into the sitting room.

"Ah, ha! This is your doing. You have let her escape!" cried Vanhorn, springing from his seat.

"It is false! She haf eloped with her lover—Fontenoy. I had found out their plan. I locked her up, but she have got out, she haf gone with him."

"Can't we follow them?" cried Vane, recovering from his amazement. "How long have they been gone?"

"Only a little while. She was there not an hour ago."

"Then follow them, overtake them," said Vanhorn, gripping the Frenchman's shoulder and hissing in his ear, "or, by the soul of Moses, I will wind you up here in a week's time!"

"Come on," cried Harold. "Show us the way they went. The night is clear; we can follow them. Order horses at once!"

Dr. Prudhomme turned to Nick and directed him to saddle two horses and bring them to the foot of the orchard.

"That is the place where they were tower, just under its helmet roof, appeared a face. A cloud of smoke obscured it for an instant, but when this cleared away, they recognized the face of Irma Weir.

White and spirit-like looked her face in the glare and wreathing smoke. She did not cry for help. She did not stretch her arms to those below. She knew they could not help her. No ladder could reach half-way to her. The staircase, the floors and walls beneath her were in flames. She was looking down at the branches of a pecan-tree some feet below her.

"Jump; catch the limbs; it is your only chance!" screamed Dusky.

But she turned away. For a moment she was not seen. The flames leaped higher. One, more greedy, licked the window that had just framed Irma's face. Bert groaned and felt despair in his heart.

"There she is!" some one cried. He uncovered his face and looked up. She was again at the window; but what face was that which showed over her shoulder? Was it a living thing—that ghastly face? Yes, there was life in the hollow eyes. Wild, eager, they shone in the strong illumination. Bony hands were locked tightly around Irma's waist. The skeleton was clinging to her!

"Shake him off! Try to save yourself," shouted Bert. He stood below with outstretched arms in the faint hope of saving her by catching her and breaking the fall.

She made no reply. Her white face was set and determined. She stood in the window. She gathered herself up for a spring down among the branches of the pecan-tree. It was just a chance that she might catch one of these as she went down. The huge trunk of the tree was twenty feet beyond the tower, but some of its boughs extended in the direction of the building reaching to the window and beyond it.

She raised her eyes in a mute prayer. She spoke to the creature clinging to her.

"Have courage! Hold fast!" those below heard her say. Then she leaped from the window. Her extended hands clutched at the limbs. She missed the first ones; but the leafy boughs half buoyed her for a second, and she caught a limb lower down. It bent under the double weight—bent its whole length down, and seemeed ready to snap as she swung from it, clinging desperately with both hands. Below her was a larger limb; if she could but reach it with her feet! But no, it was not directly beneath her; it was a little distance beyond. A volume of black smoke poured out from the windows, hiding her for an instant. Those below heard a terrible sound—the cracking of the limb, and a cry of anxious dread escaped their lips. The smoke cleared away. She was seen boldly to swing herself by the breaking limb until her feet touched and clung to the larger limb. Still clinging to the half-split bough to steady herself, she planted both feet firmly upon the other, and moved along it a step or two until she reached a fork of the limbs, where she sank down exhausted in the seat thus afforded.

A shout of relief and applause went up from below. Bert did not join in it. He had no breath to spare. Some one had brought a ladder. In an instant Bert had planted it against the tree. Snatching the rope which Dusky had been holding all the while, he sprang up the ladder and began to climb the tree. He drew himself up from limb to limb with the activity of a squirrel, until he reached the one that held Irma, he threw over her a noose of the rope. He drew it around the bodies of the two, and bracing himself against the trunk of the tree, he called to Irma to lower herself from the limb she sat upon and trust to the rope. The smoke and heat were suffocating, the leaves were shriveling around her, but she still had strength and presence of mnid enough to obey him. Holding to the limb, she let herself gently down, and loosening her grasp hung suspended by the rope in the hands of her lover. Carefully he lowered the double weight to the ground nearly forty feet below.

They gathered around them. Dusky, always ready, had a gourd of fresh water, and the scorched and half-fainting girl was revived. The bony hands still clung to her, though their owner was unconscious. He had swooned through the heat and suffocation. It was now seen that she had bound him to her. She had torn a strong strip of the sheet, passed it around his waist and hers and knotted it firmly so that he would not have fallen if his hold had relaxed. Harold quickly unfastened the knot and released Irma. He lifted her in his arms, and half carried, half supported her a little distance away from the smoke and heat of the burning pile. He laid her here on the cool, thick grass, and Dusky sat down by her and bathed her burning face and eyes. Nick followed bear-only a few yards from here.

"Then I must be his ghost. It seems to me I have been dead and buried. But no; I am no ghost. I am a live man—a free man! My head is getting right. My brain is clearing up. Come here, you man. Connolly is your name. You know me. Isn't my name Vanhorn? Am I Solon Vanhorn, or am I not?"

"I'm blessed if you ain't Solon and nobody else! I know that nose! But you've been through the rubbers, old man; blamed if you ain't. You look used up. Alive! And we huntin' up your murderer. Where's Michael? He'll be dumbfounded and overjoyed at this queer turning out!"

"Oh, ho! No doubt he will," chuckled the skeleton. "Grieved mightily over my death, did he. Was keen in hunting up my murderer, was he? Bring him to me and let me embrace him and take him into partnership!"

The sardonic grin on his skinny face was ghastly to see. Harold understood it, though the dull-witted deputy did not. He understood that Michael Vanhorn had kept his brother in secret confinement and reported his death that he might get possession of his property. He had confidently expected Solon Vanhorn's death to take place. The wound and the fever that followed had weakened him to a child in mind and body. But he had lived. His strong constitution had triumphed. Would he expose his brother? Harold wondered. He knew the Hebrew clannishness—their jealousy of outside scrutiny and interference—their reluctance to expose to alien eyes any of the wrong-doings that might take place within the pale of sect. This feeling would be stronger than fraternal regard or family pride. Vane tested him by a question.

"What was your motive for this strange piece of deception, Mr. Vanhorn?"

The resurrected man turned his eyes sharply upon him.

"That is my business," he said, with the old asperity. "I had reasons—private reasons."

Michael, skulking in the shadow behind the bushes, heard these words and was reassured.

Solon still had his eyes upon Vane.

"Who are you?" he asked presently. "I am the detective employed by your brother to hunt for Irma Weir?"

"Irma Weir? Where is she? It was Irma Weir that saved me to-night. I know her face, I knew her voice. Where is she?"

Why a Death Mask Couldn't Be Made.

A well known author owned a remarkable collection of death masks of distinguished men. Having heard that a certain foreigner had made by permission a mask of the late French president, he wrote and courteously asked if a replica of it might be secured. A reply was soon received couched in very brusque language to the effect that no replica would be furnished, but that the original mask might be purchased of him for £200. Whereupon the author sat down and wrote the following letter:

DEAR SIR—I am in receipt of your note in which you decline to allow me to make any offer for a replica of your death mask of Carnot, but offer to sell me the original for £200. I fear that my collection must remain without the mask in question, also of any mask of yourself, for I feel certain that when the time comes for the making of the latter there will not be clay enough available to cover your cheek. Very truly yours,

He Paid For the Fun.

A widower from the County of Frontenac, who attends the market regularly, had quite an experience with a married woman in the city. Frequently he sold her produce and delivered it. On discovering that he had no wife, the woman teased him about getting married. She was quite jolly with him, and he took the liberty of kissing her once. Nothing further transpired. She took the matter cooly, and again she bought produce from him. On delivering it she asked him his name in full. He told it and the next day he received a letter summoning him to a lawyer's office. Here he learned he had to pay for the fun of "bussing" a married woman. He settled for $65, and now he does not notice women. He thinks the job was put up on him from the start. Are you Alive.

If not, will some kind friend send us a notice of your obituary that we may strike your name from the list of our customers, for we only want to deal with people who are alive to the fact that to be in the race they must see well. If you have the faintest suspicion that your eyes are not just right it is best to have them examined, as the longer they are deprived of the aid required, the weaker they become. Life's Dream is O'er.

Shortly after six o'clock on Saturday evening last the spirit of Herbert Root winged its way to the great beyond and his pain wracked body was at peace. "Herb" as he was familiarly called by his host of friends, was a bright, obliging, unselfish boy and the world is certainly the better for his having lived in it. He was an optimist and always looked on the bright side of the shield. All through his severe illness he uttered no murmur of complaint and his invariable reply to any inquiry as to his health was a cheery smile and a "Oh, I'm all right." When he was informed a few days prior to his death, he could not get better he accepted the situation philosophically, and the day preceeding his death he told his mother not to weep for him, "for he would be better off." His thoughts up to the last were of those he was leaving behind and not of himself. Up to his last illness Herb had been an employee of THE EXPRESS, having worked at the printing trade in this office for about three years. Last fall he was taken down with typhoid fever and never fully recovered from the effects of it. About two months ago he was forced to quit work, owing to an affection of the lungs. He visited the Kingston General hospital, but medical skill was powerless to prevent the progress of the disease and after two weeks sojourn in that institution he returned home to die. A few days prior to his death he suffered much pain, the swelling in his feet developing into blood poisoning. He bore his illness with great fortitude and passed peacefully away in the full hope of a glorious resurrection. Deceased was 17 years and 7 months of age and his untimely demise will be greatly regretted. The funeral took place from his father's residence, Water street, on Monday and was largely attended. The Rev. Dr. Crothers conducted the services. His fellow employees in the Express Office acted as pall bearers. The remains were placed in the vault in the Western cemetery.

A Gala Day at Bath.

Saturday and Sunday last were red letter days in the history of the English church of this place. Flags were seen flying early on Saturday, and any strangers would soon perceive that something unusual was astir. It was the occasion of a visit in his official capacity of Arch-Bishop Lewis, who, on his arrival by the Steamer Hero, was met by a deputation and escorted to the Parish Hall, where, after partaking of a cup of tea, an address of welcome was read by Dr. Northmore, and to which His Grace responded. On Sunday morning a confirmation service was held in St. John's church. There were forty-seven candidates, viz: Bath forty-one and Amherst Island six. A procession was formed from the school house preceded by a banner and on arrival at the church the choir struck up the well known hymn "Onward Christian Soldiers." His Grace delivered an impressive charge to confirmers. The Bath female candidates were dressed in white and veiled, which gave a very bright aspect to the sacred service. The church was crowded to overflowing, scores remaining

Wedding Bells.

Miss Cassie Henrietta Davy and Austin Morley Fraser, Odessa, were married by the Rev. W. B. Seccombe, on Wednesday evening, April 13th, at the bride's father's residence in the presence of immediate relatives of the contracting parties. Frederick B. Carscallen, Napanee, groomsman, and Miss Sidoana Davy, bridesmaid, performed their duties in a creditable way. The bride was charmingly attired in a dress of cream colored satin cloth, tastefully trimmed with ribbons and pearls, veil and orange blossoms completing the pretty picture. The bridesmaid sparkled in emerald green satin cloth, lace and ribbons. The supper was bounteous and excellent, and the presents substantial tokens of respect. The groom, only son of Jas. C. and Mrs. Fraser, York road, is one of Ernestown's sturdy young farmers and well liked. The bride, second daughter of H. S. and Mrs. Davy, is a songstress of high attainment, and a general favorite. Her solo work in the Methodist church choir and on concert platforms for the past nine years has been much appreciated, and it is hoped the church of her choice will not now be deprived of her faithful, cheerful service. They took the train at Napanee on an extended trip through eastern Canada and have the best wishes of many friends.—Com.

Asenath Mahala Wright.

The spirit of this venerable old lady passed away, at the residence of her son-in-law, Thomas S. Irvine, near Melville on Monday, April 11th, 1898, at the advanced age of 86 years. The deceased had a strong, robust constitution, and until a few years ago scarcely knew what it was to be ill. The late Mrs. Wright was the second daughter of the late R. J. Clute, was a native of Prince Edward, was born in the year 1812, in Hallowell, and was united in marriage to her late husband—whom she survived a number of years—in early life. They were residents of the county for a number of years, but subsequently removed to the township of Murray, where they remained until the family had grown up. Mrs. Wright, with several members of the family, at a later date, returned to the county. The deceased was the mother of twelve children, nine of whom still survive, viz: R. J. Wright, Napanee; Mrs. O. Dingman, Picton; William, who remained with the old lady; George C., and Mrs. D. Powell, Manitoba; Mrs. T. S. Irvine and Mrs. S. Weeks, Hillier; Maitland D., of Ontario, California; and Mrs. Wm. Bush, Murray. Mrs. Wright, from early womanhood, was a faithful and consistent member of the Methodist church, and died enjoying the assurance of her full acceptance into the company of the redeemed. Her three daughters—Mrs. Dingman, Mrs. Weeks, Mrs. Irvine—and her son, William, were present at her bedside when her spirit took its flight. She retained consciousness to the last, and while sorrowing at her departure from her children, was yet happy at the consciousness of being released from pain and suffering. The funeral took place at 2 o'clock p.m., yesterday, the remains being interred beside those of her husband, near the Bowerman church, Hillier. The large attendance attested the great esteem in which she was held by her near neighbors and a large circle of relatives.—Picton Gazette.

Must Comply with the Regulations.

A meeting of the Board of License Commissioners of Lennox was held in the town Hall, Napanee, on Tuesday. Fifteen petitions for hotel licenses were fyled, and of this number but four were granted. Mrs. Wheeler, of the Queen's hotel, Napanee, was granted a license, but the other six hotels were allowed to sizzle on the gridiron.

It is not the intention of the Comissioners to curtail the number of licenses in Napanee, but before any of the hotels are granted the privilege of selling stimulating beverages to thirsty wayfarers, they must first comply with the regulations laid down by the board, so we are told. As the licenses expire on the first of May, our local bonifaces will have to get "a move on," so to speak. The regulations do not entail the moving of the bars so as to front the street as in Lennox that only applies to hotels outside of Napanee. W. K. Pruyn was granted a shop license for the ensuing year. The hotel at Roblin, and the two hostelries at Bath had their licenses renewed, but the Odessa and Amherst Island men are in the same condition as their brethren in Napanee. The application of Norman Rikley for a tavern license for the hotel premises situated in the village of Adolphustown, was refused. Mr. Rikley's application was accompanied by a petition containing 71 names, but as the petition only called for a wine and beer license, it was thought that a number of the petitioners would not have signed their names had they known it was a tavern license that was to be applied for, so the application went by the board. Another meeting of the board will be held shortly.

The Ponton Case.

The motion of the Dominion Bank to change the venue of W. H. Ponton's $50,000 suit against it, from Napanee to Toronto, or such other place as might be deemed suitable, was argued before the Master-in-Chambers at Osgoode Hall, Toronto last week. A. B. Aylsworth, Q. C., appeared for the Bank, and Mr. Holman for Ponton. A large number of affidavits, pro and con, were put in. Mr. Aylsworth was of the opinion that a trial of the case at Napanee would be a travesty of justice. Tuesday morning the Master-in-Chambers handed out his judgment. The Master grants the application, and fixes the venue at Belleville, the trial, however, not to come on at the first assize sittings. The Master thinks that the population of Napanee was aroused against the United States detectives employed by the bank, and against Inspector Bogart. The Master believes this feeling still exists, because they are witnesses for the bank, and it will only require their appearance on the scene to cause the same intense excitement as was shown at the trial. "Napanee papers," says the judgment, "have since the trial printed everything that could be gathered relating to the matter, and I think it cannot be denied that the news so printed has been more favorable to the plaintiff than to the bank." One thing proven by the large number of affidavits filed is that the matters in issue are widely known throughout the county, and discussion as to the same has been very free. The cross examination of seven or eight of these deponents to my mind indicates that among a large number of people the only question they consider should be decided is as to the amount of damages for which the bank should be assesssed. Having read over the affidavits and dispositions I am of opinion that this is not a case where the bank would feel they were receiving a fair trial at Napanee. I suggested Hastings County; the defendants agreed, but the plaintiff objected, and said he would not care to go to trial on the first Assize sittings in Belleville. But in my opinion, change should be made from Napanee to Belleville. The order will go, changing the venue from Napanee to Belleville, on condition that the trial does not come on at the first sitting, the bank to pay all extra costs of the change as agreed.

to the sacred service. The church was crowded to overflowing, scores remaining outside, and many being turned away. In the evening the Arch bishop preached a scholarly and an eloquent sermon which enchanted all. The church again was crowded. The service was choral and the anthem, "Why Seek ye the Living Among the Dead," was sweetly rendered by the choir. Too much praise cannot be given Miss Rouse, the able organist of St. John's, for the able manner in which she conducted the musical part of the services. The visit of His Grace will not be forgotten soon, and it has given new vigor to the church people. It is more than probable that the foundation stone of the new rectory will be laid by His Grace, and the day will be observed as a "gala day," when several other eminent church dignitaries and laymen will be present. On Sunday, May 1st, a deputation from the St. Andrew's Brotherhood of Napanee will deliver short addresses at the evening service, 7.30 p.m. An after meeting will be held for men only. All welcomed.

DRESSING WELL

Is Quite Easy When You Know How to Do It.

There are too many women who are careless about their homegowns. They imagine they are ihrifty and economical because they put on from day to day a faded or dingy dress or shirt. Such women are neither economical or wise; they are either misers or indifferent to the feelings of their family and friends when they act thus.

At an expense of from 10 to 20 cents for one or two packages of Diamond Dyes any woman can make her faded gowns or skirts as good as new. This kind of home work is wisdom and true economy.

This spring thousands of wise and thrifty women are using the Diamond Dyes, giving new life to old and cast-off dresses and costumes, fitting them for another season's wear.

When you decide to dye, do not risk your materials with poor dyes or imitations of the Diamond Dyes; see that your dealer gives you the "Diamond" that work so

Only about half a score of people faced Firman McLure, M. P., at the Brisco opera house on Sunday afternoon last and Mr. McDure did not deliver his lecture in consequence. At the close of the services in the Western church on Sunday evening Mr. McLure gave a short address on the Plebiscite, handling the question in a masterly manner.

The Canadian Star Concert Company appeared at the Brisco opera house, on Wednesday night to a small but particularly appreciative audience. The inclement weather no doubt kept many from attending. Miss A. Warnot, the talented soprano, proved a prime favorite, and Miss Tessa McCallum's recitations were much enjoyed. Miss Annie McKay's selections on the piano were well rendered and much appreciated.

There arrived at the general hospital from Napanee to-day (Wednesday) an aged negro suffering from a vital affliction. He gave his name as James Taylor, but could not definitely say whether he was seventy-eight or ninety-five years of age. He was born a slave in South Virginia, and since liberation he has toiled hard and honest for a living. He is now comfortably located in the Sampson Ward.—Kingston Whig.

Pink Pills are good for pale people but they are evidently bad for dusky dogs. The other day in Brockville a big black dog walked into the pink pill factory and without any regard to how many boxes might be required to cure his ailment, he feasted on them until his appetite was satisfied. Then he went home and died. If he hadn't it would have been another miracle to add to the long list already published about this celebrated medicine.—Ex.

The Curtain Was Down.

A party of countrymen were in town enjoying the sights. At last they came by one of the theaters in the Strand.

"Suppose we go in," said one.

"Better see how much it is first," said another.

After inquiring the price of admission they decided to send one of the party inside to see whether it was good enough or not. After remaining for some time the delegate returned.

"How is it?" asked one.

"No good. A lot of fellers fiddlin in front of a big pictur'. Come on."—Strand Magazine.
